A Visit with Mrs. Greene

When it was announced in January that Dr. Kenneth M. Greene would become Lasell's tenth chief executive in July, various campus news media hurried to interview Dr. Greene. Meanwhile, The Leaves dropped in at the Greene's present home just off campus to talk informally with Mrs. Greene about her current interests and plans for the next year.

During the remainder of this semester the Greenes will continue a rather hectic schedule of time divided between Boston and Auburndale since, as circumstance would have it, most of the Greene family, moving here eight years ago to get away from the city, now commute back into town every day. While Dr. Greene combines the completion of his term as Chairman of the Department of Education at Simmons College this spring, with becoming better acquainted with Lasell, Mrs. Greene simultaneously will complete her semester of teaching in Brookline. Presently teaching kindergarten in the morning at the Edward Devotion School, and giving special tutoring in English to small groups of non- or semi- English speaking children in the afternoon, she will stop teaching when they officially come to Lasell in July. Of the Greene children, Kenneth Jr., 12, does his share of commuting presently to Roxbury Latin where he started school this year. The two girls, Jocelyn, 16, and Janet, 13, attend

Janet

Newton High and Warren Junior High respectively.

Like Dr. Greene, who originally came from Cleveland to the New England area to attend college at Brown University, Mrs. Greene came "east" to Boston to attend Simmons College, but from closer-by, western Massachusetts. After receiving her Bachelor degree at Simmons, she then went on to obtain an M.Ed from State College in Fitchburg. Except for the years when their children were pre-schoolers and family pre-empted professional interests, she has been teaching and working with all ages of nursery-to-eighth-grade children ever since. When they first moved to Auburndale, in fact, she taught nursery school locally and later directed a children's church choir in Auburndale. Now she prefers to work with children from nursery school level through the third grade, while they are still spontaneous, and before they become hardened by the routines of subject studying in later grades. With her city kindergarteners she enjoys trying new things to meet their special needs. This year, for example, as an extracurricular project she thought of offering these predominantly apartment-living children the otherwise unlikely experience of owning a pet. Now, as a result, one well-traveled class guinea pig leaves each Friday with a different child and his provisions packed for the weekend, and returns to school on Monday morning. This temporary ownership plan for younger children who want the fun of a pet but not necessarily the extended responsibility for taking care of it, has been a great success with children and parents alike, she adds. It seems to get this need worked out of the child's system, and the family is of course glad this is so.

Mrs. Greene's afternoon program is one she says offers a very different kind of teaching satisfaction. Of the approximately 50 children who are in the program because their level of proficiency in English has caused them to fall behind in school, some are from Chinese, Korean, Israeli, Indian, and some from Spanish families. She and another teacher share the tutoring load for these students who, by age, actually represent various school levels from second to eighth grades. In the tutoring program they are divided by ability, rather than by age or native language, into small conversational groups. There they work with a few simple visual aids, and listen and respond in English, until they have the conversational ability to participate in and return to their appropriate grade level course work. Tutoring in this type of program, Mrs. Greene says, is just as rewarding as it is challenging for the teacher.

While Mrs. Greene is tremendously enthusiastic about her present teaching efforts, she says she is looking forward very much to participating in the life of the college next fall in her full-time role as wife of the President. She hopes too to have some time to continue with some of the many hobbies and interests she developed when their children were not yet school age. In their present Grove Street home there is ample evidence of her interest in interior decoration and oil painting, and now she is making plans for the changes involved in adapting the President's House to their particular needs, when the move comes later this year. Among the artistic and musical interests she hopes to find time to continue are: experimenting with simple design in both knitting and sewing, playing the piano, the autoharp, singing in the church choir, and the latest: learning to play the guitar. Her musical interest, which she traces to her own family, is shared by the Greene's children whose collective talents include playing the trumpet, piano, and clarinet, and by Dr. Greene who plays the oboe and recorder. Other common interests of the family have led to their attending concerts in Tanglewood together and taking family vacations during August, as they have for the last few years, on Cape Cod, where they fish and sail, often visiting Dr. Greene's mother in Harwichport. The latest common interests of the family are bridge and chess, and undoubtedly there will be many more. □

Counseling Service Introduced

New to the Lasell community this year is a Counseling Service, located directly across from the Health Center at the end of Maple Terrace, which operates as a wholly independent arm of the Center. The new service is an offshoot of ideas long under consideration by faculty and administration and formalized last year by Health Center Director, Dr. R. Emerson Sylvester. Its principal purpose, as outlined by Dr. Sylvester, is to provide confidential help for students with their interpersonal and emotional needs. As a part of the college health program no fee is charged.

Formerly the residence of Mrs. Dorothy Harris, assistant to the deans, the building housing the service is a unit physically set apart from the Health Center containing a reception area and waiting room, individual counseling offices, a group therapy room, a staff conference and educational seminar room, and a small area to be set aside as a library-reading room.

Counseling Service building on Maple Terrace

Full-time director of the new service is psychologist Mr. Donald Manthei who was formerly teaching and counseling at Boston University, and came to Lasell this fall from nearby Mt. Ida Junior College, where he was also an instructor and counselor. Assisting Mr. Manthei two days a week is Mrs. Ronnie Michaelson, a summa cum laude graduate of Queens College in New York City, who is presently enrolled in a Master's program for her M.Ed. in Counselor Education at Boston University. Other graduate trainees in counseling may be added to the staff as the service develops. Mrs. May Parker of Framingham, a former resident of Newton, is the receptionist-secretary for the Counseling Service.

Although individual counseling, as the Counseling Service suggests, is an important part of the work of the entire program, its overall scope is far more extensive. Besides diagnostic evaluation and psychiatric referral, which are coupled with individual counseling when appropriate, group therapy sessions and non-credit educational seminars have also already been successful. Mrs. Michaelson has provided leadership for a seminar during the first semester with topics ranging from preparation for marriage to more general issues such as the role of women in society today.

In carrying out the individual counseling side of the program, Mr. Manthei says the facility actually acts as a mental health adjunct to the Lasell Health Center. Its principal concern is to provide the same easy access to help in mental and emotional problems that the Health Center provides for physical problems. "Setting up the facility with this end in mind was in part a response to a new cultural acceptance of psychological help that has removed much of the stigma formerly attached to having mental illnesses as well as emotional problems. This is a significant step forward and continues the concept of concern for the "whole person" by Lasell Junior College." A student may benefit from an evaluative or mental health interview, just as she would from a physical exam. She may obtain some "feedback" on who she is and where she is, which can help her in the process of normal growth.

The list of reasons that have led students to come for consultation covers the full range of what one might expect from a cross-section of any group of comparable size. Mr. Manthei asserts that most of the girls he sees are normal and growing; that they simply need an assist in this process. Some are in a crisis where they find their normal growth being interrupted and need some assistance in overcoming the obstacle before continuing the natural growth process. There are two other normal types of girls which he calls "conformists" and those "acting out". The "conforming" individual displays an apathy which is really a fear of change, or is closely conforming to peer group standards; individuals who are "acting out" are rebelling against either undue or incorrectly perceived authority. This latter type of normal acting out, he says, is a legitimate form of experimenting comparable to the experimentation in previous generations. It is to be distinguished from a delinquent acting out which is destructive to oneself and to others.

As a full-time counselor on campus, Mr. Manthei feels that the service has the opportunity to provide the college with a unique program; one which should be tailored to give maximum help to the student by meeting specific needs as they arise, and that the key to developing this program is flexibility. One of the special features he has incorporated into the Lasell service, therefore, is a "walk-in" time. Regularly scheduled Monday and Friday each week from 1:00-2:30 P.M., it is a free time during which any student may just drop in, or any faculty or staff member who feels that a student needs encouragement to come, may suggest that they drop in together if the student wishes. Both the counselor and the student can usually determine their ability to work with each other in an initial interview within fifteen or twenty minutes. Therefore a student usually waits about five minutes or so for her interview if there is already someone talking with the counselor. Occasionally as many as five girls have come through the office within the hour-and-a-half period. Regular appointments are scheduled through the Counseling Service secretary.

In addition to flexibility the program offers availability through a "phone-in" time which increases access for staff, faculty and student personnel services. Outside office hours phone contact may be made by calling the Health Center.

As this first year of the service progresses, the staff plans to continue to offer leadership for student discussions on some of the normal problems and issues that are of concern to all young adults, such as sex, dating, parents, planning both a marriage and career, and other social relations problems. Educational seminar groups will also consider the students' particular areas of interest as they come to light.

The response to all aspects of the program has in fact already been very encouraging, after only one semester on campus. Mr. Manthei noted that within a week of their setting up their offices in October, the schedule was full. Although some students are referred by faculty or staff, well over fifty per cent are self-initiated contacts. □

The Lasell Medallion 1969

On June 15, 1968, Lasell's fourth President, Dr. Vincent C. DeBaun, announced the establishment of a new award: the Lasell Medallion, honoring special outstanding members of the College community, to be presented annually at Reunion in June.

As stipulated at that time, the bronze medallion award "may be made to any member of the Lasell Junior College family who, by virtue of distinguished service to the College or to society at large, has brought added honor to the name of Lasell." Any alumna, faculty member, administrator, trustee, staff member, or other person connected with the college was thus made eligible to receive this honor.

The Lasell Medallions are the gift of Mr. Chester H. Lasell of New York City, who is the grandson of Josiah Lasell, co-principal (1852-1861) of Lasell Seminary, and brother of founder Edward Lasell. Each year a committee appointed by the Alumnae Board of Management selects individuals to receive the award.

The five first recipients of the Lasell Medallion were honored at the 1968 ceremony. They were: Constance E. Blackstock '09, Margaret Trice Gibbens '16, Helen L. Beede '21, Alice Hillard Smith Corbin, and Maude Simes Harding '06.

On June 14, 1969, there were six recipients honored at the second annual ceremony. They included three Lasell alumnae and three distinguished members of the College community. As they received their medallions, the following citations were made:

Josephine Woodward Rand '10 (In Absentia)

"It does seem fitting—on this—the Golden Reunion celebration of the Class of 1919—that we applaud the President of the Class of 1910 in words of the President of 1919—the late Priscilla Alden Wolfe.

I quote: 'Back in the dear old days, which are definitely not beyond the ability of a great many of us to recall, Lasell used to specialize in training leaders. This was done, to a certain extent, through the medium of military drill and extremely strict rules for dress and decorum, plus, of course, diligent attention to one's lessons. This type of schooling (or finishing, as they chose to call it) produced young women who were able to take the lead in all good things such as making a home, rearing a happy family, attending to civic duties, and keeping an unfailing interest in the College and its welfare.' Josephine Woodward Rand is an outstanding example of Lasell girls of this era.

The oldest sister in the family of three girls, all of whom graduated from Lasell, she spent her first years after leaving school in being a busy wife and mother. When her three sons were old enough to allow her to take an active interest in other affairs, she became President of the Lasell Alumnae Association and served for five years. It was during her term of office that the Association was incorporated.

Her involvements have been many; her interest in gardens and show dogs became a hobby for the entire family. Mrs. Rand's responsibilities have included: President of the Garden Club Federation of Massachusetts, Commissioner of the Brookline Girl Scouts, Chairman of the Brookline Chapters of the American Cancer Society, American Red Cross, and Women's Republican Committee. She is a member of the New England Historical and Genealogical Society and of the Women's Advisory Council of the University of Massachusetts.

Janet Lee Sheffer '69

All of these offices require graciousness, tact, tolerance, executive ability and a zest for life that Josephine Woodward Rand has in abundance. Lasell Junior College—and importantly, Lasell Alumnae Incorporated—are justly proud of her and grateful for this opportunity to recognize Josephine Woodward Rand.

Mildred Strain Nutter '17

Mrs. Nutter's association with Lasell began in mid-Atlantic in the summer of 1911 when she was returning from a European vacation. It was then she met—for the first time—the late Lillie Rose Potter, who was chaperoning a group of students. Mildred came to Lasell in September 1914, from the Mary A. Burnham School in Northampton. After her marriage to Dr. Denton G. Nutter, she settled in Newton Centre where she became active in all community affairs, and is now a Trustee of the United Methodist Church.

Lasell has been of prime and continuing interest to Mrs. Nutter. President of Lasell Alumnae in 1940-42, she has served as a member of the Lasell Corporation since 1937. A Life Member of the Alumnae Association, Mrs. Nutter is a Director of the Board of Management; has served a number of years as a Director of the Greater Boston Club. She has been Agent for the Class of 1917; annually hostesses a mid-summer picnic for vacationing and visiting alumnae on Cape Cod.

Her more personal association has been as wife of a Trustee, the late Dr. Nutter; as mother of current Alumnae President, Marion Nutter Bredehoft '55, and mother-in-law of current Trustee, Bruce Bredehoft.

In the presence of her immediate family—Marion and Denton G., Jr.—we are pleased to award a Medallion to this devoted and loyal alumna.

Janet Lee Sheffer '69

Just six days ago—on June 8th— Janet Lee Sheffer was awarded an Associate in Arts Degree from Lasell Junior College. Daughter of Mr. & Mrs. John Sheffer of Oreland, Pennsylvania, Janet followed closely the Lasell pattern of her mother, the former Janet Jansing of the Class of 1941.

For the 1968-69 academic year, Janet has served as President of the College Government, and has done an outstanding job in meeting the demands of both the student body and of the faculty. Janet was an effective guest speaker at the 1969 Annual Alumnae Council Meetings.

When she was awarded a Lasell Jacket at this year's Class Day Exercises, Janet was given a standing ovation by her classmates.

With every good wish for the future, Lasell Alumnae Incorporated today presents a Medallion to Janet for outstanding leadership during her student days.

Muriel R. McClelland

As she herself often announces, 'Miss Mac' holds the title of 'oldest living on campus'—but that is in service only! Miss McClelland joined the Lasell faculty—as a member of the Physical Education Department in September, 1929; in 1945 she was appointed Assistant to the Dean.

In 1940, she became Lasell's crew director—and has successfully managed to sustain enthusiasm for this—our unique tradition.

Mac's roots are solidly implanted in Newton—she was born in the Newton-Wellesley hospital. While attending grammar school, she placed No. 1 in a tennis tournament; then and there decided to become a Physical Education teacher. At Oberlin College she was the all-college tennis champion, at Boston Bouvé (now a part of Northeastern University) she was named Best Athlete. The highlight of her athletic career was being chosen a member of the All-American Field Hockey Team.

Miss Mac is a faithful supporter of all Lasell activities—four classes have chosen her Class Advisor; three yearbooks have been dedicated to her.

It is a distinct privilege for Lasell Alumnae Incorporated to award a Medallion to this most loyal non-alumna Alumna.

Margaret Ricker Tewksbury

Margaret Tewksbury, wife of Lasell's third President, Dr. Blake Tewksbury, is a friend indeed of the Lasell family and recent alumnae. During their five years on campus, Mrs. Tewksbury was a most gracious hostess at the President's home on Woodland Road.

A graduate of the Buckfield High School, Buckfield, Maine, she holds degrees from C. B. Post College in Worcester, Massachusetts, and from the College of Practical Arts and Letters, Boston University. She taught for six years in Maine High Schools, and served for three years on a Committee for study habits at the Rye Country Day School in New York.

Prior to coming to Auburndale, the Tewksburys lived in La Plume, Pennsylvania, where Dr. Tewksbury—for 20 years—was President of Keystone Junior College. There too, Mrs. Tewksbury was famed for her gracious hospitality.

The Tewksburys have two sons and one newly acquired daughter-in-law. Mrs. Tewksbury greatly enjoys antiques, music, weaving and people.

We proudly present a Medallion to Margaret Tewksbury for her continued friendliness, service and interest in Lasell Junior College.

Dr. R. Emerson Sylvester

Dr. R. Emerson Sylvester, Director of the College Health Service at Lasell, is one of Newton's more prominent citizens. A graduate of Tufts University and Boston University's School of Medicine, he is presently Senior Physician, Active Staff of the Newton-Wellesley Hospital, where he has served as President of Staff.

Within the City of Newton he has been President of the Tuberculosis Association, Director of District Nursing Association, Director of the Auburndale Village Improvement Association, and for 15 years has been General Chairman of Halloween Parties for the City.

A Woodland Road resident, Dr. Sylvester is extremely active in the local Centenary Methodist Church, where he is currently President of the Board of Trustees and has served as Chairman for two capital fund drives.

For the past several years he has been a member of the Board of Directors of the Boston Wesleyan Association, publishers of Zion's Herald and is serving at present as its president; he is also a member of the Corporation and Board of Directors for Morgan Memorial Incorporated. Dr. Sylvester is a member of the Massachusetts Medical Society, Fellow of the American Medical Association, and a member of the Massachusetts Academy of General Practice.

Dr. Sylvester claims his most outstanding accomplishment is to have chosen a Lasell alumna for his wife. She is the former Arlene Wishart, a 1938 classmate of his sister, Myrtle Sylvester Ensor.

Dr. Sylvester, father of two daughters and a son, is sincerely dedicated to his profession and particularly to his obligation to the entire Lasell College family.

We are indeed pleased to present a Medallion to Dr. R. Emerson Sylvester." □

Junior College

or Early College?

by James W. Stanley Director of Development

During the past few months, there has been considerable publicity devoted to a new educational institution in these parts—Simon's Rock College in Great Barrington, Mass. First opened in 1965 as something of an experiment, the college will graduate its first class this June.

Simon's Rock is a girls' college with a present enrollment of about 200. What makes it noteworthy—even in educationally sophisticated Massachusetts—is the fact the whole institution is pitched two years below normal levels. Girls enter the freshman class at age 16, after ten years of schooling, rather than at 18 with 12 years behind them, the rule at other colleges. They then graduate at age 20 after what the institution's founder, Mrs. Elizabeth Blodgett Hall, insists is a complete college experience.

Simon's Rock, in other words, encompasses the last two years of high school and the first two years of college. Mrs. Hall dislikes the term "junior college"—who doesn't?—preferring the phrases "early college" or "middle college". She predicts that by the end of the century not only Simon's Rock but many other colleges will have shortened the basic educational process by two years, and will be granting Bachelor degrees at age 20, after ten years of preparation and four years of "early college". For those who wish to continue, there will then be either a three-year Masters program, or vocational specialties.

What is interesting to Lasell in all of this is—despite the talk about innovation and educational progress at Simon's Rock—this seems to be exactly what the Lasell brothers had in mind when they came to Auburndale in 1851—their new female seminary was intended to prove their conviction that the proper educational unit for young women, if not for young men as well, was the last two years of high school and the first two years of college. That was the way Lasell was started; that was the way it continued for 90 years until the lower grades were dropped in the 1940s. Simon's Rock is plowing new ground one full lap behind.

Much of this early history now seems to have been forgotten, even at Lasell itself which often appears unduly modest about its truly amazing record as an educational pioneer. Yet the documentation is clear.

By far the most exhaustive study of Lasell's early days was completed in 1939 for the American Association of Junior Colleges by Theodore Halbert Wilson, formerly president of the University of Baltimore. At that time the junior college movement (basically started by the Lasells) was well established, and variations were being proposed. One of these was the so-called "four-year junior college", advocated by President James M. Wood of Stephens College, Missouri.

Dr. Wilson examined Lasell's origins in a five-page article in the Junior College Journal (April, 1939). His conclusions:

1. "(Lasell) antedates by nearly half a century President Harper's mention of junior colleges." (President William Rainey Harper of the University of Chicago is credited with, or blamed for, coining the phrase "junior college" in 1896. He said somebody ought to invent such a thing.)

2. "It antedates by more than 50 years Mr. Merrill's recommendation of the 6-4-4 plan of organization." (In 1908 a San Francisco educator, George A. Merrill, proposed an educational division much like Simon's Rock today.)
3. "It antedates by three score years and ten President Wood's proposal that the last two years of high school be combined with the first two years of college."

Even in 1851, Dr. Wilson noted, Lasell's curriculum was clearly on a college level. Edward Lasell had, of course, come to Auburndale from the recently established Mount Holyoke Seminary, and from Williams College (where he had been at age 19 the youngest valedictorian in Williams' history and, later, at age 25, a full professor of chemistry).

"The parallelism between the offerings at Williams College and at Lasell Seminary is obvious," he commented. "The parallelism between the offerings at Mount Holyoke and at Lasell is likewise evident."

This early philosophy of education at Lasell was reviewed and clarified in the Lasell catalog for 1874-75. This declared:

"Young people of ages 15 or 16 to 18 or 19 should be grouped together in one administrative unit.

"This unit should include the last two years of high school and the first two years of college.

"The course of study during this four-year period should emphasize general education rather than specialized training."

In this connection, it is interesting to read in other early catalogs that Lasell classes took Harvard examinations without being aware of their origin. Their success in the tests was taken as evidence Lasell's new educational theories were valid.

So it is ironic today to find another institution, Simon's Rock, putting new blazes on Lasell's old trail, while Lasell is content to follow more conventional highways. Its initial four-year concept was never proved unsound educationally; it was slowly abandoned during the 1940s when, in effect, the popularity of the junior college crowded out the lower grades, and wartime conditions made it difficult to maintain both. Lasell never returned to its previous pattern.

Perhaps it should. In complete fairness to Mrs. Hall at Simon's Rock, it must be admitted that if the idea made sense 120 years ago, it probably makes even more sense today—especially in view of her theory that "early college" should lead to a Bachelor degree, not simply to the junior year somewhere else.

Today's students are more mature than ever before. Mrs. Hall maintains today's tenth grader is the equivalent of the 12th grader a generation ago; she is probably correct. Certainly our youth is healthier, better fed. Schools are better. Students today have access to a whole range of educational aids not available a generation ago—language laboratories, audio-visual devices, closed circuit television, improved textbooks. Teaching is better; educational budgets are up. There is surely no compelling reason why we cling to a centuries-old educational format when, with the present steady improvement in both learning and teaching, we ought to be able to compress the old 16-year track into 14.

Certainly Mrs. Hall is going to try. In her view, Simon's Rock is not preparatory for college, even senior college—it is college. Inevitably she will have to prove her case before she can grant an A.B. degree—or even receive accreditation—but at present she is full of confidence. Fortunately she needs help from neither foundation nor federal government; her father was the late Thomas H. Blodgett, chairman of the board of the American Chicle Corporation, and the money to establish Simon's Rock, as well as the property itself, came from his estate.

It also appears she has started something. Two years ago the Carnegie Foundation made grants to four private schools for boys—Exeter, Andover, Lawrenceville and the Hill School—asking them to explore the possibility of adding two years of college work to accomplish exactly Mrs. Hall's purpose. No final conclusions have been announced, but now the College Entrance Examination Board is also reported to be interested.

So where does this leave Lasell? With some questions, obviously; it may be our alumnae have the answers. Should the college resume the experiment it ended inconclusively 25 years ago?

Should we experiment again with a program to admit a few bright, goal-oriented tenth graders and try to give them the equivalent of four years of college by age 20?

Would such a program be of particular interest to black students who, because of inferior high school backgrounds, are often not qualified to get into many colleges including Lasell?

Would Carnegie Foundation be willing to help with such an experiment in the institution that started the whole idea in the first place?

Such questions must ultimately be answered, of course, by Lasell's administration and trustees, at least to the extent of deciding whether to pursue such an innovative program. Meanwhile, expressions from our alumnae would be of real interest. Would you want your daughter to enter Lasell at the tenth grade for a full but telescoped college career? Theoretically she would not need to go on after Lasell unless she wanted a graduate degree, or further professional training. Or would you feel this would apply still more pressure to youngsters already trying to do too much too fast?

Would such a pre-admission policy avoid the present college-application selection rat-race, or simply advance it two years?

Do you feel students today stay in school too long, finally emerging at age 22 without an employable skill? Or is the steady extension of formal education a measure of progress?

We welcome your views. ☐

What Has Happened to the Class of 1969?

The placement office has received the following information from the class of 1969 on their current activities. This year, for the first time, these lists were compiled solely from information submitted by members of the class themselves, rather than from the institutions to which they transferred or from other sources. Of the 397 questionnaires sent by the College, according to Mrs. Juliette Fager, Director of Placement, 195 responded with the information contained in these lists; of these, 88 are presently transfer students at other colleges and universities, and 107 report job placement since graduation.

Nell Woodward Collins: with Josephine Woodward Rand '10, enjoyed a visit with their sister, Jean Woodward Nelson '22, who came east from Denver. Drove to Auburndale from Jo's home in Brookline—all so very impressed with Lasell's campus.

Vilette Peck Crawshaw: her note closed with this, one of her most recent poems, "Trust, Do Not Fear":

We only live one day at a time—

The past is memory, the future a dream.

Things are seldom as bad as they seem,

So trust, do not fear.

Yes, God's love ordains that we shall live

But one day at a time

He does not make the hills too hard for us to climb

When discouraged or weary as problems appear—

Just trust, do not fear.

Take each day as it comes along

Fill your heart each morning with a song

Be assured that God is always near,
So trust, do not fear.

As we make the journey or today

And feel His presence all the way,
The message comes both loud and clear:

Trust, do not fear.

Mrs. Frank A. Nichols, mother of Lois Nichols Arnold, celebrated her 100th birthday on October 4, 1969. Lois and her sister were hostesses at an open-house in Mrs. Nichol's honor.

Mrs. Nichols began a new pastime, rug hooking, at the age of 90 and has since completed 27 rugs. Her latest project was a chair seat which was hooked as a wedding gift for her great granddaughter, Mrs. Kristin Arnold Miller, who was married in Henniker (N.H.) this summer.

From Jane Upton Perkins: "It has saddened me to learn of the recent passing of Dr. Inez Williams and of Mrs. Ruth Fuller. It was not until several years after my graduation that I realized the wealth of information and training I had received from Dr. Williams. In the fall of 1963 when our daughter, Sandra (Perkins Jones '65) entered Lasell I had the pleasure of meeting Dr. Williams at the tea given for students and parents. It was then that I had the opportunity to tell her of my feelings. I shall always be grateful for that opportunity. In more recent years I have been fairly successful in the program of TOPS, and I have been invited—this past year—to speak at TOPS meetings throughout the state of New Hampshire. Although it is nearly twenty-three years since I graduated from Lasell, Mrs. Fuller's speech training came back like a flash. I shall remember her most fondly for she gave me the self confidence I so needed."

Born: To Nancy O'Rourke Trevisan, ninth child, fourth son, Roger Edward, on October 20, 1969.

From Doris Trefny Kennedy: "Just a note to let you know there has been a change in my name. Vincent Iandoli and I were married June 29, 1968. We are living in Park Ridge, N.J. (265 Vitmar Place) and are in the process of adding a study-den to the house. Try to keep up with gardening. We've planted over 300 annuals and 38 azalea bushes—there are more to be planted! Recently, had a surprise call from Martha Miller Willett. She is living at 206 Kane Street, Brooklyn, N.Y."

Ann Myers Beck writes: "Our latest news is moving into a 14-room semi-

Nat Hall Campbell's ('49) "friends" with friends

Victorian house in Lisbon, Ohio (313 W. Lincoln Way). We surely needed the room with our growing boys (14, 12, 8, 7)—two house dogs—three tanks of tropical fish and two hamsters—oh yes—two green turtles. We also have two rabbits."

"Our three sons"

Mark, Craig, Keith

Via the Holiday letter, Virginia Wilder Melitz accounts for her family: "The biggest news, of course, is that Peter is now vice-president of Marketing with Boothe Resources International, Inc. This means . . . joy of all joys . . . we will be Los Angeles residents for quite some time. The children are happy for they will not be changing schools; I am happy because now I can REALLY settle down and decorate our home. Kathy, seven, is in the second grade and Scoti, who will celebrate birthday #11 in February, is in the sixth grade. Mark and Missy, eighth graders, CHOSE to take dancing lessons another year (now it is called 'Cotillion'—to eliminate that 'Dancing School' stigma). Mike entered his first year of senior high—plays the trombone in the marching and dance bands. Pete, Jr. spent a delightful summer in Maine with my aunt and uncle and is now working after school to earn money for a return trip next summer! The entire family enjoyed skiing during the Thanksgiving weekend; Pete and I are looking forward to a February ski vacation in Aspen."

Patricia Flett Davidson's "activities" are summed up in her original poem. Patty's mother is Mabel Rutledge Flett x-'21; her sister: Jo-An Flett Tyler '53.

No Maid Today,

Working Housewife!

Monday morning, I'm my own boss,
Books, taxes, leases to the wind I shall toss.

Washer and dryer running at last,
At this speed I'll finish my housework fast!

On Monday the trashmen arrive with a frown,

You guessed it . . . they caught me in my nightgown!

The wastebaskets are emptied, now
the sheets to the line

Then everything will go just fine.

The clotheslines are rusty, so I approach the backdoor

The washing machine's leaking . . .
all over the floor.

Birthday parties! In his pants I washed some toffee,

OH . . . to my silent room, with a cup of coffee!

That should make me feel much better. . . .

Until I spill coffee all over my sweater!
Coffee . . . under the glass, the rug,

the bottom drawer;
Everything has to be washed with woolite.

This housework really is a fright!

Step carefully, bathroom, bedroom,
all over the floor
I'm drying my sweaters, galore!
To the dryer to fold the clothes in there,
Dry the sheets, then comb out my hair.
I forgot to turn the dryer on. . . .
Now it will take the whole morn!
Oooooops! I spilled my hairclips and rollers,
WHY DIDN'T I JOIN THE MONDAY MORNING BOWLERS?
While picking them up, I got a run in my stocking,
My inability is rather shocking.
I called the dentist, pulled the phone off the wall,
On the terrazo floor I dropped my "Polish de Nail"
This whole damn morning is making me Pale!
Now with Nana for lunch at the Columbus Club,
I ought to go get drunk at the Pub!
It's hard to rhyme in this kind of
But the good Lord knows, I've got the food!
To supply you with a laugh of the belly. . . .
I just broke a jar of my homemade jelly!
I'm sorry I bit him over the phone,
At present my composure is prone.
Next Monday morning, and I'm my own boss,
To the wind all this housework I'll toss.
The maid settled in snug as a bug,
I'll run to work, feeling very smug!
Books, taxes, leases . . . all with a grin,
Surely I'll be a better mood I'll be in.
Instead of saying "How was your day,
dear?"
Just hug me like a Teddy Bear.
Just say "I love you, Little One,
Thank you for the work you've done!"

Corinda Johnson Deans is a member of the Manpower office staff in Stamford, Conn.

Six children, a dog and two turtles have moved to Pheasant Run, Wilton, Conn. with Mr. and Mrs. Robert E.
Logan (Ann Bowerman) from Scrant-ton, Pa. The Logans selected Wilton because they liked the area and the schools. It also is easy commuting to New York City where Mr. Logan is with I.B.M. Their children are Rob-

Mary Jo, six, Mike, three and Danny, age one.

Marion Crossman MacCallum tells us: "Our children are growing much too fast: Steven is 10; Jeffrey, 8;
Laurie, 5 and Scott, 2. Ray and I enjoyed a marvelous trip to the British Isles and Ireland last summer. We rented a car and toured the English and Scottish countryside."

From Shirley Sherwood Adams:
"We took a big step in February 1969
—my husband, Neil, is now a self-employed Consulting Electrical Engineer—he is extremely happy. A big hello to all 54-ers—hope to have news of Pickard girls!"

Joan Rabbitt Downey admits: "It is good to be civilians again after two years with the Army at Ft. Leonard Wood, Mo. We are settled in Guilford, Conn. (our first home) and are fast becoming involved with community affairs. My husband, Wayne, has opened his office in town (Adult and Child Psychiatry). Lincoln (6), Sharon
(4), and Susan (3) are our 3-Ring
Circus!"

Ruth Paetz Braun has a "recently acquired private pilot's license."

In reply to the Alumnae Fund appeal, Nancy Jean Sommer wrote to “Tap” Tardivel Higgins: “I know—within my heart, what my two years at Lasell did for me—mainly—giving me the inspiration to be successful in my future goals. My goals have been reached! I was a Retailing Major! Today I buy for 16 retail stores, in Conn. and N.Y. I have trained girls from colleges similar to Lasell; they are now Assistant Buyers. It is all very hard dedicated work—but most rewarding. I buy Junior Sportswear—the very swinging department today.”

"Winter ice brought tragedy to the Pontiac; so after three years of good service, we traded it and adopted a Saab for Dan and a Volkswagen 'Squareback' for Carole. As the wind blew, Dan was elected program chairman of the Frederick (Md.) Jaycees. With the arrival of spring came Craig's 5th birthday—and the loss of his first baby tooth. For Heather—the loss of her diapers! Summer created a job for Mom—poodle clipping. Dad made the rounds with his guitar.

"In June we were caught up in a land promotion program for a ski resort area in Pennsylvania; now we have plans for an 'A' frame. Then came the Folk Feast, our summer party: food, beer and folk music!

"Fall brought our anniversary and a dog show. Our new dog, Jon-Jon, won first prize! It looks like we shall make it back to the slopes this year—and Dan will be singing at the ski lodge on weekends.

"And that's it . . . but not without remembering the Holiday spirit and the hope that men put aside their differences and live in peace. At this time of year, even the most jaded among us can experience once again the ecstatic feeling of being ten years old—and the generation gap melts away like a snowman in a warm sun."

Dear Editor:

What is a frustrated alumna like myself supposed to do with the feelings I have now after just reading The LEAVES and finding no news whatever for the Class of 1962?

Janice (Toran '62) and Larry Stucki with Laurel Renee

After the miserable turn-out we had at Reunion two years ago, and now we are not even represented in the magazine, it would seem the epitaph has been written and once again apathy is the victor!

At the risk of being called 'square,' I share my feelings and let someone know that I care about and think of those gals with whom I shared two wonderful years of my life, and want to hear of and from them via The LEAVES.

Ann Barnett Friedman writes to Lasell's Director of Admissions, Marie Kaden '53: "Have been intending to inform the College of my marriage to Dr. Sidney Friedman, Jr., who practices dentistry in Memphis. In a recent note to Marcia Madden, Janice Toran Stucki writes: "Laurel Renee Stucki was born May 23, 1968 in Honolulu. Our first little one has proved to be quite a traveler—at the age of two months she traveled with us to Iwakuni, Japan, for a six-month stay. We returned to Hawaii in February—have since toured all the Islands. My husband will be attending Graduate School the next two years at Moffett, California. After that we hope to return to the East Coast—after all, we must ready Laurel for Lasell!"

In summer months there is the well-known Starlight Theatre—a huge open-air facility that seats about 8000 people. There are many parks for picnics, and for the horseback riding buff, there are more than ten stables from which to choose. And the K.C. Jazz Festival is really great!"

Point...

In the '70's meeting the challenge of today's changing times will continue to call for improved communication in every field — perhaps most of all in education.

The first Leaves of the decade was reshaped to begin to meet this challenge at the level of alumnae communication with the college by providing a broader framework for meaningful interchange. So, while the News From Lasell will continue to bring you bulletins of events on campus and off, the Leaves will take its cue from a somewhat wider scope of current issues shaping the world, and education specifically. It will also report on the interface between the college and change, on the people and policies giving life to the college today; and will view these efforts from the perspective of history occasionally, too.

The Leaves can be more than a source of information and communication from the college to you if you, in return, will share your ideas as well as your experiences with us. And, it is in the hope you will take the opportunity to make it more meaningful, that we welcome your increased participation.

And Counterpoint

To the Editor:

The response among our readers to "Junior College or Early College?", which appeared in the March 1970 issue, has been so extensive, we have included a few of the more interesting replies here. The article proposed Lasell's reconsideration of the four-year college concept to include the last two years of high school and the first two of college, as an accelerated college-level program.

"Re 'Junior College or Early College,' I have some comments to make:

1. There is little doubt in my own mind that we are headed toward a compressing of the traditional 16-year establishment educational program, and the original Lasell commission is one of the more interesting ways to accomplish this.
2. The requirement for increasing specialization is already a fact of life and the solid 4-year general education you propose should better equip most of our students to make the all important choice of just what that field of specialization should be and how best to prepare for it.
3. Whether Lasell should resume the experiment is difficult for me to say, but I do feel very strongly that the kind of educational opportunity you describe is essential and will be offered by an increasingly large number of institutions.
4. I have long felt that general education until the age of 22 is not really the best way to prepare a human being to make a living. The age of the generalist is rapidly drawing to a close.

This is an interesting concept and we wish you every success."

— Craig T. Senft, Pres.
Litton Educational Publishing Inc., and husband of Lois Form
Senft '50

"My younger sister is a boarder at Simon's Rock and has been doing much of her studying college-style . . . I strongly feel that if at all financially possible, Lasell should look into a similar program."

— Linda Loomis Tinsley '63
Brighton, Mass.

"I wonder! Granted the youth of today is far more mature and sophisticated than that of my generation, does it have the emotional stability to carry through with what is actually a crash program for that age group? The pressure on High School youngsters of today is appalling.

"What is so wrong with the term 'Junior College'? Frankly I would not want a daughter of mine to enter such a 'telescoped' college career unless she had a strong physique, an above-average I.Q., was 'career-minded' and had a previously high scholastic record."

— Barbara Smith Huntington '22
San Antonio, Texas

"I was not aware of the basic thinking that went into the original founding of Lasell, but I now must give tremendous credit to the Lasell brothers. If the need for change in education was even thought of in 1851, the need now for revolutionary thinking is imperative.

"I know there will be problems, but I hope Lasell is strong enough to forge ahead in this troubled work and give our youth the change and challenge they are asking for."

— Joan Weiler Arnow '49

---

"I think I would very much like to see the old system tried again; it meant so much to me and gave so much in every way. Why couldn't it do the same in this day and age?"

— Jessie Shepherd Brennan '17
New York City

---

"I believe there will always be a need for the two-year college, with courses planned for the student who is not quite certain of her goal, or wishes to take college work on a smaller campus, or to get good training and background for a profession. Let the high schools graduate their students, and let Lasell concentrate on the offering of challenging college courses for the student as an individual—not as a number in mass education."

— Helen L. Beede '21
Orleans, Vt.

"I have listened to many college juniors—I have a granddaughter there now—who seem so restless during this particular year that perhaps they do stay in college too long. It also seems to me that High Schools high pressure their students with too many extra-curricular activities, which might be eliminated with an early college selection.

"But to answer your question, while there are loads of 16-year-olds in boarding schools, I don't know whether I would be willing to enter a 10th grader in college unless put to the test."

— Elizabeth Love Macey '08
Indianapolis, Ind.

---

"I am slightly confused as to the proposition. Do you suggest Lasell become a four-year college leading to a Bachelor's degree—or two years of high school and two years of college? Either would be a good idea, but it would cost money for expanded equipment and housing."

— Helen Carter Johnson '07
Chicago, Ill.

"A school such as Lasell conceived as a four-year term would certainly be able to combine the preparation in the younger girl with a view to a total educational experience, and in the doing, cut down the time, frustration and also most importantly the cost . . .

"If a daughter isn't prepared to direct her own life with poise, honor or her best interests by the tenth grade, she probably won't be any better off by the 12th."

— Virginia Ogden Hayes '33
Edgewood, R.I.

Keeping Advance of Retailing Developments

Candia Ann Miltenburg '70

Linda Francine Warren '71

Mix fourteen chic models from freshman and senior classes with some fifty spring and summer outfits, add a lively narration from commentator Chris White '70, stir with colorful clown-costumed usherettes, season with a stage full of merry-go-round horses and bright balloons—and the tone is set for a gala "Carnival of Fashion." So, in a brisk parade of style and color from formal pantsuits to swim-wear, with many a mini, maxi, and midi in between, the Retailing Club's fashion show swept spring onto the campus on March 17.

The annual show, which reportedly takes about three weeks' preparation time, was only one, and not the last, of the club's activity schedule for 1969-70. To begin the year at the fall meeting were guests Nancy and Linda Gail Brimlow, Susan Ferrick Barton and Jackie Doucette, all from the class of '69 and all now in executive training programs in Boston-area retailing. Returning to talk about their current work assignments, their enthusiasm and the following question period, not only led the meeting into overtime, but has been reflected in the seniors' response to representative recruiters on campus this winter, according to department chairman, Dr. Charles E. Barry.

The level of interest among students in the club is, in fact, symptomatic of something happening in the Retailing Department itself—the first ever to be established in a junior college—which, in the six years since Dr. Barry came to Lasell, has undergone dramatic changes in its curriculum.

As general manager of Grover Cronin in Waltham, and a pioneer in the field of retail education at Northeastern University, and at Boston University where he has taught human relations until recently, Dr. Barry believes that the rate of development within the field is such that it is now almost impossible for someone who does not wear two hats, as he does, to keep education attuned to the pace. Changes in consumer buying habits, in management practices, in consumer products themselves, have all contributed to the changing pattern of merchandising today. "Because retailing is diversified and changing," Dr. Barry says, "we are trying to give a realistic approach, using scientific methods, and keeping in mind the academic structure—the fact that these are credit courses."

Presently the full two-year program at Lasell includes required courses for both freshmen and seniors from a broad range of subjects outside as well as within the Retailing Department itself. For freshmen this means taking subjects from the secretarial, economics, English, psychology, and speech departments to supplement their retailing work. The first year retailing courses themselves are concerned with defining the basics of each of the retailing functions within the entire system so that, for example, merchandising, publicity, and customer service are analyzed individually to determine the role, the mechanics, and the relation of each to the other functions.

For the second-year student, who has these basics behind her, Dr. Barry has introduced the case method into the curriculum. In this type of study the student determines and defines the problem to which she must address herself by finding as many facts as possible about the case as given to her. Looking first into the details and the background of the case, including the customer's background or other relevant information, she then makes a factual decision, based only on whatever information was available to her at that time. As a third step, she weighs the advantages and disadvantages of the decision she has made and, of course, spells out her conclusions at the same time.

The case study method is being used, Dr. Barry explains, because it is an effective way of bringing realism to the classroom. "We can no longer teach retailing in a set curriculum of do's and don't's. It's neither a positive nor a negative, black nor white, but rather some area of gray, where you must reason out a situation, and in retailing particularly, which is changing so fast and where competition is so keen, you must be open-minded, flexible, versatile, and you must be sure you can justify your decision."

Freshmen now have an opportunity too to step out of classroom theory into retailing practice through a Thanksgiving-to-Christmas field work program, formerly limited to seniors. Extending the work period to students with only three months of actual curriculum study, explains Dr. Barry, gives them a chance to learn before one and a half years in the program, whether or not they are really suited to the merchandising field. They are assigned to stores in the Boston area whenever possible, so that members of the faculty can go at least once to see the students on the job, to get their reactions and those of their supervisors, and to make a performance rating of their work.

To make the experience more meaningful, they are required to keep a record of their own, such as a diary recording daily sales results, new customer situations, special assignments—any specific in which they became involved. At the end of the period they submit, and are graded on, a report which includes a description of the job, an analysis of the organization by policy, size, and structure, their objective impression of the assignment as a whole, and comments that seem relevant to the experience.

When their senior field work assignments come the following year, the students are then ready to handle some level of supervisory responsibility—and in fact are given only assignments where this is understood to be a job requisite so that they get direct training in leadership through actual on-the-job decision-making.

Seniors returning from second-year field work program have described their preparation as "complete," and "very progressive." Perhaps its success can be measured even better by the response of the four alums who returned this fall expressing enthusiasm both for their present involvement and for the case method as a very desirable way of making retailing realistic. □

Alumnae Council 1970

Lasell Alumnae Incorporated began the Twenty-Second Annual Alumnae Council Meetings on Friday, April 3, 1970 with a program that included a social hour in the New Lounge of Woodland Hall, and buffet dinner for the class agents and secretaries attending. Guest speaker at the dinner was Miss Joyce Gregorian, daughter of Lasell Trustee Mr. Arthur T. Gregorian, who gave an informative illustrated talk on "Oriental Rugs and the Stories They Tell," for the assembled council delegates.

Saturday morning delegates met again to address business matters at the Annual Meeting in Wolfe Hall and outgoing President Marion Nutter Bredehoft '55 presented the gavel to incoming President Sandra Shelton Fitch '56, who introduced the new Board of Management. Following a coffee break the Alumnae Career Panel were introduced by Marjorie MacClymon '32:

Alumnae Career Panel

Innocentia Matete '70

Unlike the four succeeding panelists, Innocentia Matete, who completed the academic requirements for graduation in January and will graduate in June, talked about her experiences before coming to Lasell. Born in Lesotho, a small nation formed in 1966 and located geographically in the middle of South Africa near the Cape region, she came to America to teach Peace Corps volunteers her native language, Sesotho, at the Corps' language center in California. She told council delegates something of her country and her experiences before coming from the center to Lasell two years ago (see p. 12).

Lois Warner '64

Group Manager at Wanamaker's newest suburban branch store in King of Prussia, Pennsylvania, Lois Warner talked about her career in retailing, which started when she received her A.S. in Retailing from Lasell. A month after graduation she joined the executive training program at Wanamaker's in Philadelphia, and the following May was promoted to Assistant Buyer in the same store. The next fall, in September 1965, she was transferred to her present position where she is now in charge of three sections: the fine jewelry, stationery, and candy departments.

Helen Bonier Evans '54

A graduate of the general academic program at Lasell, Helen Evans' topic was her work in public relations; a field she entered in 1961 when she joined Microwave Associates, an electronics firm on Route 128 outside of Boston, as Assistant Director of Public Relations. In 1965 she was promoted to her present position as Director. Transferring from Mt. Ida to Lasell in 1953, she graduated the following year and became an editorial assistant at the M.I.T. School of Industrial Management. Later she spent two years as a reporter and feature writer for the Chestnut Hill News in Philadelphia. She is a member of the International Association for Industrial Editors, the Boston Press Club, and the Public Relations Society of America.

Barbara A. Adler '47

An administrative Assistant with the Massachusetts Medical Society, Barbara Adler was featured in a recent issue of the monthly magazine, Massachusetts Physician, for her work with the Society. She was a medical secretarial graduate in 1947, having also completed her last year of high school work at Lasell in 1945. Early in 1948 she took a job with the Society on a temporary basis, and except for a brief interval of living and working in Texas, has been with them ever since. She told alumnae some of her responsibilities and particular interests within the broad range of duties encompassed in her position.

Lora Green Buckingham x-'41

Mrs. Buckingham is a program specialist with the American Association of Retired Persons and the National Retired Teachers Association in Washington, D. C. A native of New Rochelle, N. Y., she attended Lasell for the 1939-40 academic year, and continued her education at the University of West Virginia before starting her community service career as Director of Programs for Women and Girls at the New Rochelle YMCA. Four years later she was continuing her work with YMCA groups, again as Program Director in Hot Springs, Arkansas, and then went on to become Director of the Neighborhood Senior Citizens and coordinator of Head Start, Neighborhood Youth Corps and Job Corps as Deputy Director of the Garland County Economic Opportunity Council. Joining the NRTA staff in 1967, she worked closely with many groups active in the field of aging in the Los Angeles area before transferring from the NRTA West Coast Headquarters to their Eastern Headquarters in Washington.

Describing some of the challenges and rewards of her career thus far, she also told council delegates about the many varied opportunities existing for volunteers in the "Senior Power" movement, through which older persons have been joining together to achieve common goals at the local, state, and national organization levels. Speaking of her involvement with these groups she said, "Although I've enjoyed all ages, I'm really having a grand time now, because there are so many groovy and great older people who respond to what I have to offer. What more could anyone ask?"

The morning session was concluded with questions to panelists from the floor, and adjourned for luncheon where guest speaker Dr. Greene was introduced and spoke to alumnae representatives for the first time.

Dr. Greene Sees Bright Future for Lasell

“When Mrs. Fitch invited me to today’s meeting, she asked that I speak briefly on a subject of my own choosing, and further suggested that some of the alumnae might want to ask me some questions—such as why I chose to come to Lasell.

“Perhaps it would be just as well to anticipate that question now and to start off with some of the answers. First of all, as you know, there is something strange about a college presidency nowadays. Vacancies in college and university presidencies are in evidence all over the country—and nowhere more in evidence than in the Boston area. There are good reasons for this condition. The job has become something less than a sinecure. It has become risky, frustrating, unpopular—some people even insist, impossible. No doubt that is why when the news of my appointment was released, friends invariably approached me with the same weary wit: ‘Congratulations,’ they would say. ‘Or should I say, condolences.’

“Apart from tiring of the joke and finding myself increasingly unable to muster up the appropriate expression when I had heard the remark for the fiftieth time, I did not feel the need of condolences. No one was holding a gun to my head when I decided to accept the Lasell offer. I accepted it because I believe Lasell has a bright future and because I feel that I can make a positive contribution to that future.

“One of my primary reasons for wanting to take the Lasell position is that I think it will allow me to get re-involved in education—that is, in the work of an institution primarily concerned with teaching. Such an involvement is becoming more and more difficult to manage. In most universities and four-year colleges, the life of an administrator today or of most faculty members is largely a life of negotiation and adversary procedures. It is the administration against the faculty or the faculty against the administration or the students against the faculty or one special-interest group against another. The notion of the college as a community—as a collection of people with common interests in learning is disappearing from the scene.

“And I really think, as things now stand, that the two-year college offers the best hope of regenerating that collective spirit—largely because it has had a long tradition as a teaching enterprise primarily and consequently has been less mixed up in other enterprises than has been the case with four-year colleges and universities.

“Now, I am not naive enough to view the two-year college as a haven from all this present-day turmoil. Certainly adversary procedures are not absent from the Lasell community—and at this time I am not even sure that ‘community’ is an accurate descriptive word to use. Judging from what I am told, the faculty morale could be higher. The students are chafing, as students usually do, under what they view as oppressive restrictions. And the spectre of rising costs looms over every bush and gable.

“But these are problems that can be dealt with in rational ways, and if I did not think so I would not be here today.

“I am impressed by the strengths of the college. For one thing it has an able faculty—bright, hard-working teachers. I have met Lasell students who transferred to Simmons, and I know they are well taught. Not long ago a friend of mine at one of the large universities in the Boston area happened to remark to me that she had been impressed by one of her students who had transferred from Lasell and had complimented the girl on her academic successes. The student acknowledged the compliment and said that she only wished she had encountered teaching at the university as good as that she had enjoyed at Lasell. Now, to be sure, this is an isolated example; and someone will remind me that it is unexamined testimony. But I do not dismiss it as insignificant. One cannot be in the academic profession in an area like Greater Boston for as long as I have been without developing a pretty good awareness of how the several institutions in the area are regarded. And I know that Lasell is respected for its teaching quality. Nor should we be surprised to find that the quality of teaching in a teaching institution is generally better than that in some of our most prestigious universities, where much of the teaching is left to graduate assistants, whose minds are chiefly on their own dissertations; or where some of the teaching is done rather reluctantly by scholars who would rather be spending their time in research.

“One of the great failings of American higher education, unfortunately, is the way it treats teachers. The rewards go chiefly to the big scholars or the clever administrators. We all give lip-service to the notion of excellence in teaching. But we must reward it financially. Otherwise the spirit of the teaching faculty will be crushed.

“We have to publicize the image of Lasell as a fine teaching institution, and we have to keep working on the reality to make it conform to the image. This may mean some pruning as well as planting. That is, it may mean cutting out some of the deadwood so that new healthy growth can occur. Nor do I mean this remark to apply only to personnel. It applies just as much to curriculum and other aspects of the college life.

“I make these remarks because by tradition the alumnae are supposed to be conservative and thus inclined to resist change. But in fact I have not found this to be altogether true. I have found that the alumnae represent a stable body of opinion that is interested not so much in change or no change as in the quality of change. And therefore the alumnae body is an excellent restraint against impulsive, unreasoned change.

“So I want to assure you that though I fully expect to preside over changes of one kind or another, I am not coming into office with a determination to turn the place upside down on the first day. As I told the students, I want to look around very carefully. I want to listen to people thoughtfully and get as firm an understanding of the problems of the college as I can before I start pressing for changes.

“Meanwhile I intend to practice forbearance. Keeping one’s cool, as it is called in some quarters. And I expect that you will have to practice forbearance too. We cannot lose sight of the fact that the students are younger than we are. Their interests will be different from yours and mine; their compulsive drives will be different. Their ‘life styles,’ to use a modish phrase, will differ from ours. As a result, they will be pressing for changes of which many of you will disapprove. Already their social freedom far exceeds anything that many of you dreamed of when you were in college. And they will want to extend the limits even further.

“I do not say that my policies will be repressive, though they may seem so to some; or permissive, though they will certainly seem so to others. I will try always to act in the best interests of the college—the college as a whole community. And to act intelligently in this interest I have to have contact with all the parts of the whole, and to incorporate or assimilate into decision-making the reasoned wills of these parts. Consequently, I will be depending upon you for assistance; your knowledge of the institution will be indispensable to me; your support will, as always, be indispensable to the college.”

The Lasell Medallion

The Lasell Alumnae Inc. Board of Management voted this year to make the annual presentation of Lasell Medallions during Alumnae Council rather than at Reunion in June. Presenting the five 1970 medallions for Lasell Alumnae Inc., President Sandra Sheldon Fitch '56 said: "For the third year, Lasell Alumnae Incorporated is privileged to honor alumnae and friends of the College, who, and I quote from the Medallion inscription, 'have added distinction to the name of Lasell.'

Helen Carter Johnson '07 (In Absentia)

"Helen Carter Johnson came to Lasell Seminary in 1902 from Hastings, Minnesota; was graduated in 1907. She furthered her studies at the University of Chicago; decided to write advertising.

"In 1917 a group of twenty-two women in the advertising field—a not too familiar category for women at that time—met at the Chicago College Club. As a result—in November of that year, the Women's Advertising Club of Chicago was founded with Helen Carter as its first president. The group celebrated its 50th Anniversary in 1967; its membership now exceeds 200 and includes presidents of agencies and advertisers, as well as top executives in every phase of communications.

"Mrs. Johnson's involvement in civic and community affairs are many; special concern being given to the Infant Welfare Society of Chicago and the nationally-known Lighthouse for the Blind. Her interest and pleasure in helping the progress of young people is pointed out in the numerous scholarships she has sponsored and supported. Friends, the Women's Athletic Club, and Monday duplicate bridge games are her chief social activities.

"We are extremely sorry that Mrs. Johnson's health does not permit her to join us today. Lasell Junior College and Lasell Alumnae, Incorporated are proud of Helen Carter Johnson and are grateful for this opportunity to recognize a stimulating person, who maintains a zest for life and a desire to serve her fellow-man.

Wilder N. Smith (In Absentia)

"Wilder N. Smith first became interested in Lasell when, as a young Gilchrist office manager, he began to accompany his wife, Antoinette Meritt Smith '23 to Alumnae meetings.

"Mr. Smith, a graduate of the College of Business Administration at Boston University, has spent his entire business career with the Gilchrist Company, a Boston based department store chain. He was Treasurer, Director and Comptroller of the Company; served also as treasurer of its employee credit union until the time of his retirement in the fall of 1969.

"He was elected to the Board of Trustees of Lasell Junior College in 1950; named Chairman of the Board in May 1962. During his twelve-year term as Trustee, he served as Vice President of the Lasell Corporation and a member of the Finance Committee.

"The Smiths reside on Woodland Road in Auburndale and have enjoyed vacationing each winter in Florida. Unfortunately they did not think it wise to return from the South in early April. We can heartily agree that enjoying the warm Sarasota sunshine, walking along the beach, playing shuffleboard and golf certainly sound far more appealing than enduring this week's abundance of sleet, snow and cold wind.

"Upon his retirement as Chairman of the Board, we wish to say thank you for a job most well done. It is a distinct privilege for Lasell Alumnae Incorporated to award a Medallion to this loyal and devoted friend who has given so untiringly of himself to promote and sustain the good name of Lasell.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith will continue to serve on the College Board of Trustees; we extend sincere affectionate wishes for a fulfilling and comfortable retirement.

Madeline Farmer Ryder x-'15

"It was fortunate for the Alumnae Association that Madeline Farmer Ryder decided to follow the pattern of her mother, the late Mary Walker Farmer, and attend Lasell.

"Wife of the late Paul Ryder, and mother of Pauline and Paul, Jr., Mrs. Ryder, a long-time resident of Waltham, has taken an active part in community and church affairs. The Lexington Chapter of the D.A.R. and Lasell continue to receive her interest and support. As an active worker in the Waltham Girl Scouts, her training in nature still prevails. She lends a hand to conserve the wild life by feeding the 45 to 80 ducks which frequent her back yard.

"Mrs. Ryder is a member of the Greater Boston Lasell Club, is Fund Chairman for the Class of 1915; has served Lasell Alumnae, Incorporated in various capacities; for a number of years opened her home for a Spring Tea to benefit the Alumnae Building Fund. It is a genuine pleasure to award a medallion to this devoted and loyal alumna.

Virginia Ogden Hayes '33

"Virginia Ogden Hayes was graduated from Lasell Junior College with the Class of 1933. When a first year resident student at Old Woodland Park, she was most impressed by the training and teachings of the late Mrs. Statira McDonald. These influences have greatly appreciated over the years.

"Mrs. Hayes has been an active member of the firm of C. I. Hayes, Inc. of Cranston, Rhode Island. Her late husband founded the business, fulfilling his dream to build furnaces for industrial use with electric current. Carl Irving Hayes was President-Treasurer at the time of his death in 1965; Mrs. Hayes has succeeded him in that capacity.

"Mrs. Hayes is the proud mother of Alice and Carl, Jr.; adoring grandmother of Wendy Alice Barrows. She has always been interested in Masonic and church activities, and politics. While she has never held political office, she has been a hard-working vote-getter for favorite candidates. Mrs. Hayes has held high offices in the Order of Rainbow and Eastern Star; is past and current chairman of numerous committees of the Edgewood Congregational Church. Her leisure time is spent reading, enjoying music and traveling.

"In June 1969 the Seminar Room of the new library was dedicated in memory of her husband. It is with great pride that Lasell Alumnae, Incorporated awards a Medallion to Virginia Ogden Hayes for her continued interest in and support of the College.

June Babcock

"May we share with you a portion of this recent letter from Acting President June Babcock: 'Dear Alums: I am deeply touched and very humbled by your decision to award me a Lasell Medallion. For twenty-eight years the College has been the center of my life and I have become increasingly involved in its problems. Many of the students whom I taught have become my dear friends, and more and more I feel myself an alumna of Lasell.'

"June Babcock was graduated magna cum laude from Taunton, Massachusetts High School, cum laude and Phi Beta Kappa from Wheaton College, and holds a Master of Arts degree from Cornell University. Before coming to Lasell, Miss Babcock was a member of the faculty of Kents Hill School in Readfield, Maine and of the Grier School, Tyrone, Pennsylvania. Since 1942 Miss Babcock has worn many hats at Lasell—instructor, assistant dean, dean of Women and twice has been called upon to serve as Acting President of the College.

"Life at Lasell is extremely busy and allows little time for community activities. Miss Babcock is currently serving her ninth year as a successful Class Agent for Wheaton College. She and her handsome yellow cat, Dennis M. Babcock, reside at 70 Maple Street—the small stucco house beside Winslow Hall. Her leisure hours are spend sewing and traveling.

"It is indeed a privilege and pleasure for Lasell Alumnae Incorporated to award a Medallion to so devoted and dedicated a member of the Lasell Family; to one who has shown great tolerance and understanding in her years of service." □

From Lesotho to Lasell

The youngest member of the Career Panel at Alumnae Council this year, Innocentia Matete '70, from Lesotho, came to Lasell by a circuitous route leading from Africa through the Peace Corps language center in San Diego, and back to the East Coast. When she receives her associate degree in June, she will probably have the distinction too of being one of the most interviewed foreign students to graduate from Lasell, having appeared before numerous student and civic groups to talk about her country, which at a scant four years of age, is one of the newest nations in the south of Africa. At the end of the first semester this year she was also interviewed on Newton Radio where she told how she happened to come to Lasell and what some of her plans were for the future.

As she explained, the first step to her further education here came three years ago when she applied for scholarship aid from her government to study abroad. While waiting to hear from the authorities, she learned instead that her government had nominated her for a U.S. Peace Corps project, teaching the Lesotho language, Sesotho, to young volunteers at the California language center.

Before long she and fifteen other new teachers were jet-bound for San Diego, via New York City. Describing the Peace Corps experience, Innocentia added that while New York had surprised them with its overwhelming size, teaching with the Peace Corps held some surprises of its own. The first was making their initial encounter with their students at the airport, where the Corps had arranged to have them meet and return to the center together by bus. During the ride, as during the remainder of the program, teachers were to use no English whatever, although as a second language taught since grade school in Lesotho, it would have been the most natural aid to communication. So, while introductions were cumbersome, before the end of the bus ride students were able to understand and were responding in English to simple questions put to them by their now slightly more seasoned teachers.

The pace thus set, it was sustained over a six-month period of what Innocentia described as both a challenging and exhausting experience. Using neither translation nor written words, they worked with groups of six to eight students each in intensive all-day sessions of conversational instruction. At the end of two or three months a few of the one hundred volunteers starting the program could express themselves in sentences; at the end of six months, seventy were graduated from the program, ready to begin work in Lesotho. Even for those especially gifted in learning new languages, Innocentia added, it was a particularly difficult assignment since Sesotho contains many clicks and hard sounds that have no counterpart in most Western tongues. The sounds even vary so much between languages in southern Africa alone, where there are 286 of them, that it is difficult for people in one country to understand the languages used in their closest neighboring country.

Next in the chain of events leading Innocentia to Lasell was correspondence between former President Vincent De Baun and Lesotho Ambassador A. S. Mohale in Washington, which brought her to Auburndale in February of 1968. Aside from a confrontation with immigration officials who arrived during her first final exams to announce that her visa had terminated with her Peace Corps work and to threaten deportation, she says she has found her two years in the general academic program at Lasell very pleasant and rewarding. Enjoying the proximity of Newton to Boston, which she visits about once a week, and her friends here, she decided to transfer this February for the second two-year leg of her education as a junior majoring in political science at Newton College of the Sacred Heart. Now 23, she hopes to be able to complete the requirements for a degree in law after obtaining a B.A. and then return to her home in Maseru, the capital of Lesotho, to contribute in some way to her country's development, perhaps through politics.

The most urgent long-range problem facing the government of Lesotho presently, she says, is education. Since there is now only one university, students leave their high school program with a strong background in math or health sciences, but without either the technical skills for a trade, or reasonable hope of further advanced study, or, therefore, any choice about their future. As a result, many students go to neighboring African countries to continue their education, and understandably many also remain there to work. While the present government has pledged itself to raise the capital necessary to extend the level of existing education, it is still a slow and arduous task for a young nation crowded with priorities.

Political independence, first from South Africa, in which Lesotho sits, as Innocentia puts it, "like the hole in the doughnut," and second from Great Britain, whose protectorate she was until 1966, established Lesotho then, for the first time, as a democracy. Since that time the economy has expanded; new transportation systems have been constructed. But the major products: wool, diamonds, and electricity are presently the only economic complements to the primarily agrarian society. Located in the heart of the area comprising the southern tip of Africa, the nation of about one million people remains scattered in the low lands and mountainous regions that together total approximately 11,900 square miles, or roughly the size of the state of Maryland. Aiding in economic development, the Peace Corps continues to provide educational and community development assistance to support the present economic framework, lending technical or engineering leadership in building water systems, and teaching such subjects as biology and English in secondary schools.

Beyond their own boundaries, Lesotho and other new nations in Africa continue to fight for economic autonomy by working together and pooling their limited resources in a spirit of unity and cooperation. But, while neither external nor internal disunity, such as that within Nigeria, is a major inhibiting problem for most of these countries, getting recognition and cooperation from the larger, more powerful nations frequently is.

Asked about the opportunities that might exist for her to make a contribution to her country's development, should she return with a law degree as she hopes, Innocentia did say that she believes the role of politician, even that of Prime Minister, to be a natural one for a woman; that it is really a question of acceptance by the people. □

From the Campus

Concert and Lecture Series

Leading off the Concert/Lecture Series program for 1969–70 was Winston S. Churchill, grandson and namesake of the late Sir Winston, who, at 28, is a noted author and a reporter for the BBC whose reputation as a journalist was firmly established with his coverage of the Biafran civil war in March 1969. Still deeply concerned with the Biafran problem when he visited Lasell on October 15, he suggested to his audience, some of whom had just returned from a day of marching in protest to the Vietnamese war, that all of the four major crisis areas in the world today, including Czechoslovakia, Biafra, the Middle East, and Vietnam require U.S. attention, to the exclusion of no one of them. He added that he hoped the present mood in America “did not herald a new era of isolationism, because no country in this day and age can be an island to itself, particularly not the greatest and most powerful nation in the world.”

Speaking to a capacity audience in Winslow Hall, Mr. Churchill then focussed on “The Continuing Crisis in the Middle East,” first describing the major events of the 1967 six-day Arab-Israeli War as he witnessed them, then highlighting the historical bases for the multilateral viewpoints in the Middle East today. An informal discussion between Mr. Churchill and students followed at a reception at the President's House where he explored a full range of topics from world politics to student concerns on both sides of the Atlantic.

On Tuesday, Nov. 11, the college was host to the second guest in the series, pianist Agustin Anievas, whose program included his much lauded recordings from the Works of Chopin and Brahms. In the first half of the program were the Twelve Etudes, Opus 10 of Chopin, and four Chopin Waltzes. After intermission he concluded with Brahms' Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Handel which he recorded recently for Seraphim.

Then, on February 11, Country and Western, Folk, Blues, and Bluegrass singer and guitar picker "Doc" Watson and his son Merle received a standing ovation for their performance of familiar songs, guitar pieces, original numbers, and adaptations of other melodies. Campus enthusiasm ran high as The Lasell News said of the evening, "This concert had to be one of the best, as far as both talent and audience attendance are concerned, that the school has ever had." A reception in Winslow Hall was held after the performance.

The last guest of the College in the 1969-70 Series was Julian Bond, member of the Georgia State legislature and nominee for the vice-presidency at the 1968 Democratic Convention in Chicago. Again quoting from The Lasell News, "On April 15th, removed from the riots of Cambridge, Lasell's largest audience this year gathered to hear the Honorable Julian Bond (Independent-Georgia) speak on the New Coalition. Those who were expecting a rehash of the Chicago Convention were sorely disappointed for Mr. Bond spoke quietly, humorously, and eloquently."

In explaining his views, Mr. Bond touched on the broad issues of freedom and inequality underlying the position of the Negro in society today, the influence of black leaders to date upon that position, and what he called the "political victimization" of the black community. Summing up these problems and frustrations he quoted Frederick Douglass who assigned both their cause and the source of a cure to the character of the nation as a whole. He closed with a lively question-answer period and added that on a college campus we really don't see it all happening and have no real idea of what it all means—to which the audience rose in a standing ovation. □

'29

An early reply to the 1970 Alumnae Fund appeal:

Indeed I remember the Natatorium, but not as an object of ridicule—far from it! You see, my Mother was Mrs. S. P. McDonald, whom you may remember as the Dean of the old Woodland Park! Before that, she was the "preceptress" of Woodland Park School in which I spent my childhood, 1918-1928. At that time, we were well taught that Lasell Seminary was the first girl's school to have (1) a domestic science department and (2) a swimming pool, both of which were objects of great pride.

We children were allowed the use of the pool on Saturday mornings, which was one of the big days of our week. To begin with, we were allowed to buy twenty cents worth of penny candy, spread out in five-pound boxes on one of the billiard tables in the Casino. This was to last us all week and therefore, decisions were made not lightly and more consistent with quantity than quality. Of course, we ate it all, walking through the woods and down Woodland Road to Bragdon, our towels under our arms and our hearts gay, for this was our only free venture during the week. Only one trial had to be endured—the town youngsters who sat on the stone wall below Billings (?) dangling their feet and hurling epithets at us, such as "Woodland Park Bums, yah yah" as we scuttled past. And so we arrived at the pool, half sick with chocolate and righteous indignation.

I cannot forget that warm, damp, oppressive air, smelling strongly of mildewed bathing suits, rubber bathing caps and spongy wood; but after the first movement, we hardly noticed, and jostled one another for favorite cubicles to change in. While this process was going on, we sang at full strength "Coming down from Bangor, in a Pullman train" etc. and other gems of musical inspiration and then with shouts of "Last one in's a rotten egg", flopped into the murky depths.

We were fortunate in our supervisors and one in particular, a Miss Boynton, a stocky girl who impressed us no end because she knew Gertrude Ederle, the first woman to swim the Channel. She managed to teach us to love and respect water and introduced us to the intricacies of the Australian Crawl, forerunner of today's familiar stroke, which was just coming into vogue then. She organized Meets and coached us in diving, an activity from which I still bear the marks, having gashed my hand, bloodily and dramatically, on some sinister object on the hidden bottom.

It was always a cold trip back to Woodland—after two hot sodden hours, our hair wet, sinuses and ears full of water, throats sore, muscles weary, but with an overwhelming feeling of relaxation and well-being.

I have a cottage now on the edge of a cliff overlooking the Northumberland Straits, where I go for two months each summer. There I swim every day and enjoy the same wonderful feeling, but with a difference—no chocolate, no singing, no indignation and not nearly as much fun! Enclosed is a small contribution—it is not really for the new Olympic-size, chlorinated beauty abutting the esker—it is in gratitude and affection for Saturday mornings at the old pool.

Gwendolyn McDonald Black
Mrs. J. L. Black
Middle Sackville
New Brunswick, Canada

Mary Thomas Neal is Treasurer of Gift Fund—a home for neglected and dependent children of Edgar County (Ill.).

Eleanor Pitcher Hansen's Granville (Mass.) home, built in 1795, was open to a house-tour in the fall. Eleanor spends the winter months in Kendall, Florida.

Elizabeth Palmer Bedell x-'29 is Chairman of the Language Department at the North Middlesex Regional School in Pepperell (Mass.).

and William—live at 4922 Hill Road, R.D. 2, Oneida, New York.

Mary O'Connell wasn't exactly given $1 million on Sunday, January 4, 1970. But she came as close to it as most people ever will. Miss O'Connell, Somerset's chief Dietitian, for the past 24 years, had a portion of the hospital's new $1 million wing dedicated in her honor. The section of the hospital that now officially "belongs" to Miss O'Connell—as it has unofficially since 1946—is the spacious new dietary department, which is in the final stages of completion.

The Administrator of Somerset Hospital (Somerville, N. J.) is Nelson O. Lindley, husband of Priscilla Chapple '40.

Mary Morgan Schulhof and daughter, Sharon, attended the Southern California Luncheon in March. Mary contributes this bit of personal news: "My son has a scholarship at Boston U. and a Teaching Fellowship at the Marine Lab at Woods Hole. He received his MA from Fullerton State College in Marine Biology last June and worked at the Smithsonian Institute in Washington, D. C. during the summer. He is so much enjoying his experience of living on Cape Cod—a winter in New England is another new experience. He did spend 18 months on the 32nd Parallel in Korea—and experienced his share of bitter cold there."

"Would love to have had Sharon attend Lasell—but finances and distance deemed it necessary to attend a State College in California. I find life almost too full—and constant new challenges—having New Horizons with the installation of our new GE-600 Computer."

"Either I need longer weeks . . . or longer weekends . . . look forward to a time when I might have a little more time for myself, and to enjoy my friends. My husband has a travel office (one of the oldest on the west coast) and it necessitates his travel to keep up contacts and have first-hand info for his customers. I have had some fabulous experiences and seen parts of the world I never would have dreamed of—but it has been at a fast pace . . . with little time, even after returning home, to enjoy in retrospect."

"My best regards to any who remember me—Helen Beede '21, Miss McClelland, and my dear friend, Lil Bethel '28."

Dorothy Peabody Hayman now lives at 209 Murray Drive, Doylestown, Pa. She continues her interest in painting and dancing.

Ruth Rohe Smith lists as her "favorite" hobby—"breeding champion Basenjies". Barbara Pearce Keach has a similar interest—breeding and raising American bred cocker spaniels.

Jane Filstrup Totzke x-'31 is Director of a new high-rise dormitory at Ferris State College, Big Rapids, Mich.

We extend sympathy to Helen Burwell whose mother, Mrs. Jessie Crone Burwell, died on February 15, 1970. Mrs. Burwell was retired from the Hartford (Conn.) public school system.

Emeline Walker Fatherley x-'33 and family enjoy their vacation home in Bradford, Vt.

Louise Cenedella Kidd contributes much time to volunteer services in a local hospital. Louise's address is 185 Hillside Road, Southbridge, Mass. The family summers in East Hampton, Long Island.

Sybil Thomas Ryder x-'33 declares: "My first love is music. I'm a member of the Brockton Symphony Orchestra."

Class Secretary Ruth Stafford Clark attended the 1970 Annual Alumnae Council Session; shortly thereafter sent the following: "Hearty congratulations to our own Lasell Medallion winner, Virginia Ogden Hayes. This honor was given to Virginia on April 4, 1970 at the Alumnae Council Luncheon in recognition of her continuing interest in the College and for successfully carrying on and expanding the C. I. Hayes Company as president and treasurer, following her husband's death in 1965. Through Virginia's generosity and loyalty, a seminar room in the new Library has been given in memory of her late husband, Carl I. Hayes.

From Yesterday To Today

A Word About Women's Colleges in America

Colleges for women have been the outgrowth of the nineteenth century, although this statement seems hardly credible to our college-girl of to-day, who prides herself on being able to cope in things intellectual with any Harvard student. Co-education was first tested at Oberlin in 1833, and five years later the first diploma ever issued to a woman was granted by this college to a young lady whose name is unknown. This was quite a startling advance upon the ideas of our forefathers, who insisted women were created solely to look after household matters. Yet, though this was indeed a great gain to our sisters of that day, the crying need of America at that time was a college exclusively for women.

Finally, after the people had for fifteen years agitated the question of higher education for women, justice and good sense prevailed, and the Georgia Legislature in 1836 chartered the Georgia Female College, which was presently built at Macon. The first faculty was made up of eleven professors and teachers; and although the curriculum of study fell far below that of the same college at the present day, it was equal to that afforded by the majority of the contemporary colleges for men. What a vast difference between this and the faculty of Wellesley or Vassar! But everything must have its beginning.

The Georgia Female College opened January 9, 1839, with an enrollment of ninety ambitious young ladies. Eleven of them, having already received, from seminaries which they had been attending, a course of instruction entitling them to enter the senior class, were graduated the same year, and had the honor of carrying off the first diplomas ever granted by a college exclusively for women. Such is the history of the first college for women ever established in America.

The example once set, other states founded similar institutions, and in 1861 Vassar, of which we to-day are so proud, was founded at Poughkeepsie, N.Y. Our colleges, as a rule, have not been developed after the plan of boarding-schools; but, as far as is possible to make them so, they are copies of men's colleges. It is the desire of the faculties of such colleges to obliterate all intellectual distinctions based on sex, and to make woman equal to man in her intellectual attainments. This idea of equality has been carried out, as far as the adoption of the same curricula tends to its promotion; but it can never be fully realized until women have something to take the place of the athletics of the colleges for men. A sound body is essential to a sound mind. Without good health it is impossible to do justice to one's studies. The belief that fewer rules and less restraint on students create an independent spirit, and are followed by better results, is coming rapidly to the front. Hence it is easily seen how much more is expected of us than our grandparents, who had not nearly so many advantages. Every year the educational advantages for women improve in a remarkable degree. 'Tis not only to colleges that we owe a heavy debt, but also to the numerous preparatory and other schools. We see with thankful hearts what a great advance the education of the women of to-day shows when compared with that of only seventy-five years ago.

Commencement Address

Following is the text of remarks made by Dr. Fred M. Hechinger, Education Editor of The N.Y. Times addressing the 115th Commencement exercises on June 6, 1970.

This is not the year, and this is not the moment for ceremonial talk. It is not the time to engage in routine backward glances, nor in business-as-usual admonitions. Nor is it, I think, at all productive for us to face each other as members of different generations, however much chronological age may divide you and me. It seems to me downright frivolous now to talk about such platitudes as the generation gap. There is no gap in the realities that face all generations of Americans alive today. The reality is one of crisis, of a nation divided as it has not been divided since the Civil War. The reality is a crisis of confidence, a feeling we have strayed off the roadmap. The reality forces us—all of us together—to ask the question put to us precisely by so balanced a philosopher and social critic as John Gardner: "What must be done to prevent our society from disintegrating?"

I think most of us, whether we oppose or support specific American policies of the moment, are fundamentally agreed on our desperate search for an end to the war abroad, and peace amongst ourselves at home. We are not a callous people. We are shaken by the sight of young men and women killed, as we are shaken also by reports of innocent women and children massacred in the emotional degradation of a war we cannot—and indeed should not—understand. It is to our credit that so many Americans shuddered alike to the news of Milai, Kent State and Jackson. We do not—and we never must—grade tragedy by the nationality, race or color of those who are its victims.

But I do not want to speak today primarily about the war and the reaction to it, although I deeply believe we must end the war as quickly as possible. It is quite conceivable that we may find our way out of Viet Nam, and may still not be able to find our way back to America.

The moral confusion, although it helped get us into the war in Indo China, is deeper than the war itself. The greater danger is that we lose faith in our institutions and ultimately in ourselves. Much of the attack today is directed against the system. Those who defy the system and bring it to a halt, in the courts, in the schools and in the universities, become heroes. This I think is wrong and dangerous. I say this not as a conservative but as one who has always distrusted the status quo, and who believes that a system that does not respond to the need for change is doomed.

Despite all its faults, all its detours and aberrations, the American blueprint offers remarkable scope and promise to the advancement of freedom. Considering the size of this continental nation, and the complexity of its population, the marching orders contained in the Constitution and the Bill of Rights remain miracles of pragmatism and high ideals.

Dr. Fred M. Hechinger

The safeguards against the abuse of power built into that system are, although not absolute nor perfect—as we know so well today—nevertheless are capable of preventing disastrous abuse, provided we have the courage and the determination to make them work.

Those who attack the system have chosen the wrong target. When the system fails to work, it is the fault of the men who work the system. It is the fault of those of us who elect the wrong men. Beyond that it is the fault of all of us who create the wrong atmosphere, who abandon sanity and morality, who put the Constitution and the Bill of Rights on automatic pilot.

Our freedom and safety, indeed the entire American experiment on the eve of its 200th birthday, are today in danger unless we recognize that the fight against repression and coercion cannot be fought selectively. It must be fought with equal will and integrity on all fronts.

Repression is intolerable whether it comes from reactionary government officials, legislatures and police forces, or from coercive students who want to force other students, faculty members, or the colleges themselves, to submit to their views or demands. There is no difference between construction workers who assault student protestors, and student dissenters who forcibly prevent their opponents from speaking, or who employ arson and “trashing” against those with whom they disagree.

We must be uncompromising in our demand that our elected national leaders desist from actions and statements which divide the country. We cannot allow these officials to ignore the laws and the Constitution. No national emergency is so great that a violation of civil liberties and usurpation of powers is not more serious.

We cannot permit law enforcement agents to take the law in their own hands. The mission of the police and the National Guard is to keep the peace and prevent injury—not to break the peace and inflict injury.

But neither can we allow dissenters, whatever the idealism of their cause, to threaten, coerce, or commit violence. A young professor at Columbia recently said he saw nothing wrong if some of his colleagues were manhandled when they tried to enter a building which radical strikers had shut down. A faculty committee at a great state university recently said that it was better to learn to live with the breaking of windows and occasional fire-bombs than to allow the police to patrol the campus.

I consider such readiness to live with violence on campus a disaster. If force defeats reason in our colleges, then force is certain to triumph over reason throughout the land. We must fight the evil in our land, prejudice, poverty, injustice, and the exploitation of human beings. We must recognize our failings and correct them, but there is no gain in nationalizing and Americanizing what are human failings. A highly idealistic critic of American education said recently that American schools are the most autocratic in the world. This is of course nonsense. Much is desperately wrong with American schools but it is fair to say that they are close to being the least autocratic in the world. This may not be saying much for the schools elsewhere. But if we mis-diagnose what is wrong with our own, it will make it that much more difficult to cure their real ills.

Similarly, to submit to the slogans of America as the most racist, or imperialist, or inhumane society is to obscure rather than expose and attack the real issues. The wrongs under attack are made no less odious because they are human, rather than American failings.

The fact is that the American system of government, properly led and used, is potentially better equipped than any other to fight against racism, imperialism and exploitation. Guilt feelings are no substitute for effective and competent action to make the system serve the people, all the people, without regard for race, color or religion.

A scholar I know recently took his radical teenage son on a scientific expedition to Africa. After his return, he commented on the impression the experience had made on his son. It made him realize, the father said, that poverty is not an American invention. It made the young man no less complacent, but it made him direct his efforts at the problem of dealing with poverty, instead of raging against America.

In an earlier wave of educational reforms almost two decades ago, a professor who helped shape a new curriculum said that the goal of all sound education ought to be to teach people to consider the consequences of their actions.

This has always seemed to me a basic prescription. If we had only considered the consequences, would we be in Viet Nam, or in Cambodia today? Would we ever have allowed one race to exploit another? Would we vote on the promise of short-term satisfaction of immediate self interest? Would we really have any doubt that the protection of anyone's rights, and the rejection of anyone's coercion is worth putting up with any amount of temporary inconvenience?

If we make it our goal to consider the consequences of our private and public actions, and if we do so in our political actions too, holding our officials responsible for the consequences of what they say and promise and do, then we can look beyond the present turmoil.

But to do so, we must recognize slogans for what they are: devices to deceive us. They deceive us about the inability of generations to talk to each other, to sort out the interests they share, rather than those which divide or distinguish them, and work together. Even when the style differs, the ends can be jointly sought.

If you and I cannot talk together, how will you talk to your own children later on? Yet I am sure that you will want to bridge the gap when you become parents, just as I am trying to do between me and my children. The way to accomplish this, I believe, is to start once again to think of people, not of movements or establishments, and to consider the consequences of our actions on the lives of those people, those we love, those we barely know, and even those we dislike—even our enemies. When we do that, and turn our backs on those who refuse to join us in that humanizing endeavor, particularly if they are politicians, then we can once again become a nation of hope.

And you, in your families, in your communities and in the world, can be part of regaining what we, in our blindness have almost lost.

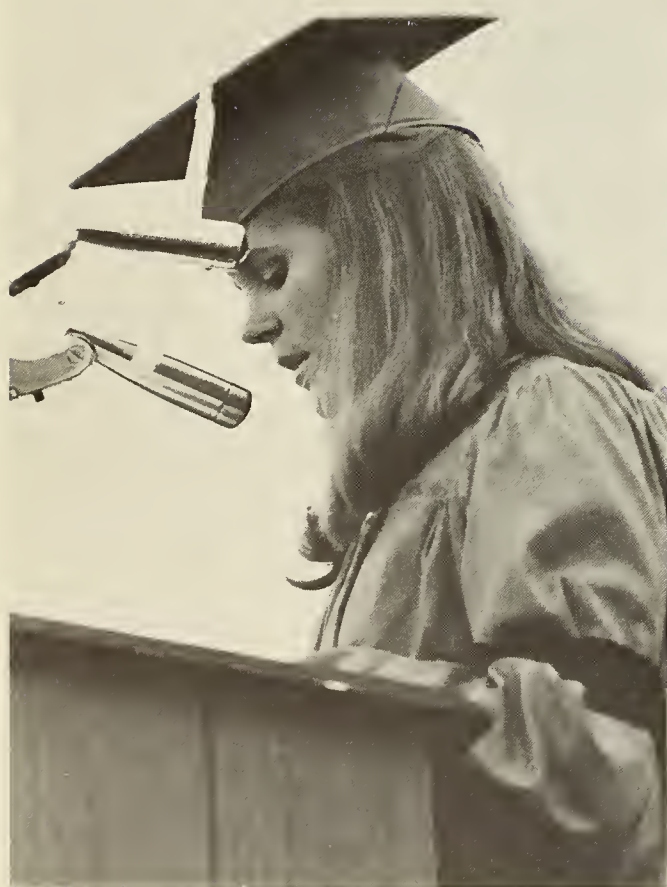

Thank you.

'70 in a Year of Dissent

While the class of 1970 nationwide ended a year of violent and non-violent campus action in a turbulent spring of graduations, or protests to graduation, or the omission of graduation altogether, graduation for '70 at Lasell concluded a more peaceful year of involvement in the trends of dissent and change.

During the year '70 had been concerned first about the war in Viet Nam. In the fall seniors led campus interest in organizing protest activities and participating in the October 15th Moratorium.

Some obtained peace petition signatures from commuters at nearby MBTA stations, others joined the thousands marching onto the Boston Common in peaceful protest. The Lasell News carried a series of articles discussing the war from its origins to a poll of faculty opinion and an eyewitness account of the November march on Washington by Cindy Watts '69. In The Lamp '70 said: "We dedicate our book to those Living . . . Fighting . . . and Dying in Viet Nam."

On campus seniors were concerned with the regulations, the organization, and the direction of the College, in meeting and creating change. A Student-Administrative meeting instituting Blue Book changes to relax the regulations covering dress, smoking, and car permissions was followed by a Student-Executive Council meeting to prepare proposals later submitted as 25 demands to the Administration for college government, curriculum and organization changes. In the spring their efforts to achieve student representation at faculty meetings resulted in voting membership for four students who were in attendance at the April 26 meeting for the first time in Lasell's history. A student strike to support five faculty members who had been issued terminal contracts resulted in the establishment of an Ad Hoc Committee composed of four students, four faculty, and three administrators now meeting once a week to set up faculty evaluation procedures. The program for Commencement itself had been modified to include remarks by both student speakers and a faculty spokesman. In everything, the theme had been increased participation and involvement.

My Sister Mary is A Neophyte, or, Look to Your Laurels, Mrs. Malaprop

English Department

To those of us who live constantly with the Death Wish in that bizzare, dim half-world called English 101 or Freshman Composition, the Vocabularly Game is still an effective memento mori, the gray speck, the Ash Wednesday daub on the forehead reminding us of our vulnerability as champions of the Word in the Age of McLuhan. One batters away at the resistance to precision, at the hostility to objective standards of criticism nurtured through four year of "creative" high school English classes, sweats out somebody's eclectic anthology of essays or short stories, examines one's own methods for symptoms of faltering "relevance," weeds out the tosh and twaddle and resounding clichés of a succession of "themes," offers hints for Effective Writing, laboriously expounds the classics, such as Orwell's "Politics and the English Language." In short, one tries to Cope.

Somewhere in their early college or even pre-college experience (judging from the number of themes that begin "Webster defines 'love' as . . .") students have acquired access to a serviceable dictionary. In repose, which is to say, seen from the infallible side of the lectern, their faces reflect amusement, comprehension, even curiosity. Some may challenge one's more flaccid generalizations or dispute a point here and there in the reading. So when the time comes to see how much is intelligible to them in context, one is understandably hopeful that some borders of meaning have been defined.

But the ear, evidently, works well ahead of the dictionary mind. A while back, after calling attention to some of the more exotic terms in our reading, and suggesting that a Funk & Wagnall's formula was not enough for the diligent scholar, who must apply a word accurately, perhaps even gracefully, I asked my freshmen to use each of the following words in a sentence:

1. introspective
2. mercenary
3. effete
4. neophyte
5. analogy
6. unctuous
7. Junkers
8. anthropomorphic

A few sample results, not necessarily the most striking, but food for thought among aspiring pedagogues:

1. They were always effete after hiking.
2. Anyone may use the analogy, which is up in the library.
3. My sister Mary is a neophyte.
4. Neophyte can be found in the ground. It is one of the 92 natural elements of the world.
5. The analogy we use in class is full of interesting essays written by well-known authors.
6. The mercenary traveled from mission to mission.
7. The judge had no choice but to be mercenary.
8. Over the years John had become a neophyte.
9. The effete was quite tall and beautifully composed.
10. He was a neophyte at writing [sic].
11. The girl next store [sic] was often called a neophyte by the gang in school.
12. Mr. Gray was loved by all, he was congenial, and one of the biggest neophytes in his neighborhood.
13. We should more introspective ourselves at that point.
14. Something very effete had to be done to improve the style and plot of the essay.
15. The Junkers, once they receive their supply, wait patiently for the addicts.
16. If you see strange looking people stranding around a ship, looking suspicious, they are probably Junkers.
17. The neophyte set fire to all the barns along the way.

19. George and his wife went on a mercenary trip to help George's sick mother.
20. Some of my best friends are anthropomorphic.

Brooding over such, one is tempted to give the students credit for unsuspected resources of whimsy. At least they apply themselves to the search for plausibility, euphony and coherence, after a fashion, and some of the exotic usages hold up rather well, empirically. When I introspective myself, for instance, I find that I am effete after a three- or four-mile hike, though not necessarily tall or beautifully composed, and it is true that many, if not most, of my best friends are anthropomorphic. To those of us who remember the films of the 1940's, moreover, Nos. 16 and 18 evoke vivid glimpses of Hollywood heavies like Otto Preminger and Erich von Stroheim, suitably trench-coated and monocled, sifting through the community refuse in search of the secret formula.

The instructor may well conclude, too, as the themes drift in, that some freshmen are more apt than he assumed to rely on auditory osmosis in keeping the stale phrases out of their writing. A mourner is described as "prostate with grief." The village post office is alive with activity because "not only the natives but the summer people conjugate there." A brief immersion in modern literature may return a mind-bending judgment that "Albert Camus was an exit-sensualist."

One is grateful, after a couple of deep breaths, for the images thus provided, and once again made aware that in teaching Freshman English (or any other foreign language) the trick is to enunciate slowly and distinctly.

Photography Offers New Art Medium

When photography was introduced into the art department curriculum this year as a two-semester credit course for senior art students, cameras could suddenly be seen almost anywhere on campus. A new darkroom was completed under the direction of art instructor Jan Doucette who teaches the course, and students shooting on and off campus began to produce many interesting results on a variety of assignments. Some of these explorations into the aesthetics of a new art form, were included in the spring issue of The Quill and are reproduced here.

Focus on Alumnae

Profile: Sara-Jane Osborne '64

Freckle-faced Sara Osborne holds the distinction of being Senior Charge Nurse of the only hospital Foot Room in the country. Working with six members of the Deaconess medical staff, Sara sees over 30 diabetic patients a day suffering from foot problems that are commonly associated with the disease.

About 80 percent of the patients who are admitted to the hospital for foot infection or gangrene undergo surgery involving amputation of a toe, several toes, or a leg. Sara, assisted by two Foot Room nurses, is faced with the monumental task of rehabilitating these patients.

"No one looks forward to an amputation," she said. "Usually their outlook is pessimistic; they're against the world and the doctors and nurses who are treating them. We urge them to think positively about the relief from the pain of infection an amputation will bring and the renewed ability to walk again with an artificial leg. When they have made up their mind to accept the amputation, they begin asking questions like how long surgery will take, how much pain there will be following the operation, and how much they will be able to do for themselves with an artificial limb."

Sara arranges for a physiotherapist to visit the patient before surgery. Four to five days following surgery she teaches him how to use a walker and how to do the various exercises necessary to strengthen his muscles. Patients who have undergone leg amputations are measured for an artificial leg five to seven days after surgery, and the leg is put on sometimes as early as two weeks after surgery.

The "team approach" is used in the treatment of foot problems. Sara's day begins by making rounds with the doctors. She removes the dressings, discusses with the doctor how the patient is progressing and what new activities he is permitted to do. She applies a new dressing—an art requiring a good deal of finesse as foot dressings have a way of coming off. Sara meets with the other Foot Room nurses once a day to talk over the best approach for each patient because not every patient accepts surgery the same way. Many older patients may require special attention if other health problems are involved, such as a heart condition, or bad eyesight or hearing. If necessary, Sara arranges for a social worker to aid the patient in the rehabilitative process. Her job doesn't end when the patient leaves the hospital. If the patient is returning home, Sara puts in a request for a visiting nurse to see him at home.

The challenge of rehabilitating a patient following surgery is a tough one calling for patience and perseverance. "We get 79-year-old patients who tell us they would rather die than go through surgery for an amputation," she said, "but they walk out on a new leg and leave us in a cloud of dust." Sara is particularly proud of one patient who was admitted for a below the knee amputation—a procedure requiring lengthy rehabilitation. He weighed in at 300 pounds before surgery. After surgery he lost 100 pounds and is now back driving a truck.

Sara became Senior Charge Nurse in the Foot Room in November 1968 after deciding she wanted to go into a more specialized area of nursing. The area she picked is so unique that there are no textbooks on feet or special courses to take for preparation. "On the job training" takes from four to six months before a Foot Room nurse is accustomed to the doctors, the routine, and what to do for certain conditions.

Sara began working at the Deaconess the day after graduation from Lasell. Prior to becoming a Foot Room nurse, she worked as a staff nurse. When she's not headed for the ski slopes in the winter or the beach in the summer, she's busy planning her next traveling adventure. She toured southern Europe in 1966 and has a trip to northern Europe including Russia and Germany planned for the spring.

Reunion

'30 at the 40th

The Class of 1930 celebrated their 40th Reunion at Lasell on June 12-14, 1970. What a great success for those who were able to be there! Ruth Lenahan Kask, Corinne Cowdrey Murray, Marjorie Magune Curtis and I took advantage of the opportunity to stay at the college for the weekend. It was truly delightful—great accommodations and greater meals!

After the Friday evening Buffet we gathered in my room for a "social hour"—we had a chance to read the returned questionnaires and to catch up on all the latest news of classmates.

Dorothy Meeker Pearce met us after breakfast on Saturday—incidentally, she won honors for coming the farthest distance—from Sarasota, Fla. We enjoyed the tour of the campus in Lasell's new Greyhound bus with Miss McClelland as our guide. What changes and additions have been made since our day!

Phyllis Jensen Swenson, Joan Collier Cooper and Eleanor McKenney Black arrived in time for Alumnae Luncheon; our total representation was eight.

A "class meeting" was held after luncheon; the following new officers were chosen: Secretary, Ruth Lenahan Kask; Agent, Eleanor McKenney Black; Reunion Chairman, Corinne Cowdrey Murray.

Our Day concluded with dinner at the Pillar House on Saturday; Lillian Bethel '28 joined us.

We look forward to seeing many of you at our 45th in 1975.

... Frances Smith Miller, Secretary

Dear Classmates:

The 1910 Class Letter is here, until our Class Secretary, Marion Hale Bottomley, returns from her trip to Florida.

She had no response from a few members of our Class, many of us are over eighty and avoiding extra responsibilities—but those who did write, would prove stimulating to any age group.

Julia ter Kuile Brown writes her son, Dwight, is deeply involved in electronics. Barton was decorated by the Belgium government for his work there for General Motors.

Tot McLean Hunt seems to have found the secret to perpetual motion. Her letters and travels and family are a joy to all of us in 1910. A recent issue of "House and Gardens" had an article and lovely colored illustrations of her son's home overlooking the golf course in Dallas.

Mildred Snyder Grant lives in New Orleans. I call her our philosopher; her letters are a study in depth on the problems and joys of today's living. Her son, Walter, Jr., is a Designing Engineer particularly interested in Nuclear Submarine work. Her daughter, Mildred (Grant Smith x-'41) has two fine sons. They still live in Beaumont, Texas.

Julia Hamilton Peters and Julius "have traveled a lot, seen many countries and have too many homes for my satisfaction." But her "gallery" of pictures proves a fine, happy family surround her and her husband.

Irma Levi Levy's letters reveal her charm and gracious acceptance of responsibility to today's problems. Pride in her children is obvious and heartfelt.

Mildred Goodall Fairbanks leads a fascinating life in Florida—she and her children and grandchildren belong in a fairy tale!

JO WOODWARD RAND

It was followed by an exhibit of graphic arts by Tufts art instructor Milton Johnson, and later by two exhibits of senior art and a photographic exhibit entitled "The Altered Image," featuring unusual techniques in the medium by four University of Iowa graduate students of photography. This is where my information runs out . . . for the moment . . . but of course, that can be remedied. Won't you drop a note when you can, so that we can all share the news of what is happening to you, that in one way or another touches all the members of the Class of 1944.

Best wishes to you all,
FRED A RECK DUBIN

Point . . .

In the continuing debate about the role of Junior Colleges in the changing pattern of education, Dr. Gustave O. Arlt, President of the Council of Graduate Schools in the U.S., had this to say recently:

"The Junior College movement and its unbounded growth clearly indicates the insistent need for post-high school education. I foresee that the Junior College will eventually become a part of basic secondary education and that the great majority of youth—in some states, all—will be in school until age 20. This development itself will fundamentally change everything that follows. . . .

"The bachelor's degree will, after a long and bitter rear-guard action, disappear. Indeed, if we are perfectly honest and realistic, we must admit that it is already an anachronism. A hundred years ago, it was a social status symbol. Fifty years ago, it was a union card for membership in many vocations. Today it is the admissions ticket to graduate school, and only a partial admissions ticket at that. Now if the graduate school becomes an integral part of an endless continuum of advanced education, what purposes will the baccalaureate serve?"

A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT TO THE ALUMNAE

I am glad of the opportunity to speak to the alumnae through this letter and I hope that it will be the beginning of a continuing communication between us. First of all, I want to acknowledge the cordiality of the reception I have had since coming to Lasell on July 1. Everyone has been most gracious and enthusiastic; and though I am sure that many people realize that the job I have undertaken is not going to endear me to everyone, they know the job has to be done and they are offering their support.

Even before taking office I had a chance to meet alumnae groups last spring, and from the beginning I was impressed by their frank fondness for the College and by their intense loyalty to it. As I settled down to work in July and began to absorb the atmosphere of the campus—the combination of dignity and vitality, of mellow age and new energy, I began to acquire a clearer understanding of what inspired the alumnae loyalty. Lasell is an institution of distinctive character. An aura of quality embraces it, and that quality deserves not only to be preserved but to be developed.

My job, of course, is to see to the preservation and development of the College; and to that end I devoted my first days to learning all I could about the policies, practices, traditions, plans, and problems that are identified with the institution. As I had said to various segments of the College community back in the spring, it was not my intention to turn the place upside down immediately. I wanted to look around carefully, to listen attentively and to reflect on needed changes. And this is what I have been doing as far as possible. But I discovered very early in my term of office that there were some things that could not wait to be done. For example, I was much concerned about the position the College would take regarding requests from some quarters for a change in the College calendar that would allow two weeks off at the end of October to permit students to work in political campaigns. There had been some talk about this matter in the spring. An inconclusive student poll had been taken; department chairmen had reached some general agreements; but no clear position had been taken that reflected the will of the College community. In my view it seemed unwise to wait until college reconvened in late September and then to patch together a plan or policy that would almost necessarily reflect the haste in which it was conceived.

Therefore, I formulated a position that seemed reasonable to me in the light of what I knew of Lasell, of students generally, of faculties, of federal tax laws, of local assessors' policies, and of my own philosophical convictions about the educational process. The details of the plan I will not go into here because they appear in the most recent issue of News from Lasell. Suffice it to say that the plan calls for no interruption of the regular college calendar, but it does offer a facility to students and faculty who wish to participate in the election process. It was conceived to encourage free and healthy participation in a vital aspect of our lives—but not at the expense of the equally vital aspect of formal education.

What I have been talking about is a matter of short-range planning for a very specific purpose. We will always have to be prepared to do that kind of planning. But it is even more important to develop a comprehensive scheme of action for the College—a chart of its course for the next five or ten years. And so I was delighted to find that the Chairman of the Long-Range Planning Committee of the Board of Trustees, Mr. Alfred Edwards, was eager to get going on the formulation of a plan. Consequently, the committee was convened in August for an all-day meeting; and at that meeting some very significant agreements were reached—principally that the College should undertake a systems approach to its long-range planning. The initial stage of that approach, a statistical profile of the College as it is now, is almost completed at this date and will, in a few days, be ready for presentation to the Committee at its next meeting on October 27. It is perhaps worth adding as a footnote that the recently announced theme of the annual meeting of the Association of Independent Junior Colleges is "Plan or Perish."

Both the Long-Range Planning Committee, and the Building Committee, which also met this summer, addressed themselves to the question of constructing new dormitory facilities. In my inaugural remarks, I have referred to our decision to turn down a federal loan that would have covered a large part of the cost of building a new dormitory. I mention this painful decision again here simply to underscore the necessity for the College to improve its financial position to the point where it can afford, in a similar situation, to assume the cost of debt service and the cost, over and above the amount of the loan, to complete a dormitory, and still to meet its other obligations and serve other priorities.

The financial squeeze that is hurting colleges all over the country is not sparing Lasell. The cost of operating a college increases at an alarmingly greater rate than the income increases. When an institution depends almost exclusively on tuition for its operating revenue, it has a very severe problem indeed. There is a limit beyond which tuition and other charges simply cannot be raised if the college is going to continue to fill its enrollment capacity. But rising operating costs do not respect that limit. And so, of all the problems that currently confront American colleges—and Lasell among them—the economic problem is the most forbidding.

Naturally we are exploring every possibility of reducing operating costs. I have made it clear to the faculty as a whole and to the chairmen of departments in particular that we must examine our course offerings from a view to eliminating those that are no longer serving significant educational objectives and that are no longer attracting students in sufficient numbers. But even if we reduce the size of our faculty somewhat, even if we make more efficient use of the resources we now have, we cannot delude ourselves into believing that we can survive the economic crisis unless we can bring substantially more income into the College.

And this is where we need help from the alumnae. Your help is needed, I think it is fair to say, as it has never been needed before.

Lasell has never had a major capital fund drive—a drive aimed at achieving a seven-figure goal. One of my chief responsibilities is to prepare the way for such a campaign, and to that end I have been meeting with groups and with individuals who might be persuaded to help the College. But the principal source of support will necessarily be the alumnae, and I am quite frankly worried by the present relationship between the alumnae and the College. There is on the one hand the virtually autonomous position of the Lasell Alumnae, Incorporated, and on the other hand the College's tendency not to involve the alumnae sufficiently in institutional plans. Clearly we must get together. No capital fund drive will succeed unless the alumnae are brought in under the College umbrella and we all work together for the same purpose. The Board of Management of Lasell Alumnae, Inc. was kind enough to invite me to speak at their recent meeting, and I expressed candidly to them my hope that they would very soon reach their goal in the fund drive for a swimming pool so that the College could project realistic plans for a capital campaign.

Meanwhile, I might conclude by giving you a brief summary of the issues and activities currently under consideration at the College. Because I believe that we need a broadly representative body to formulate institutional policy, I have charged Dean June Babcock and Miss Elizabeth Anthony to draw up recommendations for the composition of a College Senate. Because I want an efficient means of contact with all the College constituencies even before the Senate is established, I am forming a President's Advisory Council consisting of representation from the alumnae as well as from the faculty, student body, and administrative staff.

Because I am uneasy about the absence of a clear and comprehensive statement of student rights and responsibilities at Lasell, I have charged the Judicial Committee, under the chairmanship of Dean Nancy Seiple, with the job of drawing up such a statement and presenting it to the College community for adoption. In the interim, I have made it clear in my announcements to the faculty and to the student representatives in the faculty meeting that the College will act in accordance with the recommendations of the American Bar Association to the Association of Student Government last year—recommendations that were intended to serve colleges that had as yet drawn up no rules of their own.

Among other things, the Bar Association recommendations stipulate that students should have the right of peaceful protest and demonstration but that any disruptive or destructive conduct is subject to disciplinary action up to and including expulsion. Disruptive action includes the obstruction of any of the normal teaching or administrative proceedings of the college. At the same time the recommendations protect the rights of the students very explicitly. Their right of personal freedom is protected and they are assured that if they should be charged with any kind of misconduct they will be fully protected by rules of academic due process. It is my hope that regulations will be cheerfully obeyed and that disciplinary procedures will not be necessary; but recent history suggests that a college should be prepared in advance for dealing with crises, large or small, and that to be unprepared is to invite chaos and panic at the worst and a feeling of insecurity at best.

Still along the lines of establishing procedures and policies that will enable us to live together as harmoniously as possible, I am going to recommend to the Board of Trustees that we set up a commission of students, faculty, alumnae, trustees, and parents to explore the concept of in loco parentis as it relates to Lasell. The purpose of such a commission will be to come up with a philosophical position upon which our social rules can be based, so that instead of changing rules piecemeal and in response to pressure of the moment, we can make changes that reflect a common understanding of the College's responsibilities to the students and to their parents. This notion may be too Utopian, and we may, in fact, want to change some rules slightly even before the commission meets; but the idea is, I think, basically a sound one and I would like to try it out.

Finally, I am hopeful that the faculty's anxiety about the issues that affected the strike of last spring will be relieved in large measure by the work of the Ad Hoc Committee on Evaluation. That committee has been meeting regularly through the summer and has produced a very full report and specific recommendations for procedures to be followed in the evaluation of faculty members for promotion, retention, or dismissal. This report is now being discussed by the several constituencies of the College and, I assume, will be adopted either in its present form or in a slightly modified form before long.

I think it is vitally important that we do everything possible to generate a hopeful and positive attitude on the campus. If you think there is anything I can do that I am not now doing to help create this kind of attitude, I will be glad to hear from you. Meanwhile, I look forward to meeting many of you personally as I visit regional Alumnae Clubs through the year.

— Kenneth M. Greene

INAUGURAL CONVOCATION

On Tuesday, September 22, 1970, Dr. Kenneth M. Greene became Lasell's fifth president in a special inaugural convocation in Winslow Hall. Representatives of the trustees, alumnae, faculty, and students offered their greetings, which are reprinted here. Executive Director of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Frank A. Tredinnick, Jr., and The Honorable Monte G. Basbas, Mayor of Newton also welcomed Dr. Greene to the professional and neighboring communities. Then, on behalf of the trustees, Mrs. Rosen installed Dr. Greene in a brief induction ceremony and he addressed the Lasell community for the first time as its president. The text of his address also follows on page 8. Entering Winslow in the processional were: (above, left): Dr. Greene and Mrs. Rosen; and (above, right): Dr. Packard and Sandra Boys, walking behind trustees Richard Winslow and Joseph C. Skinner.

From the Trustees, Mrs. David Rosen; Chairman of the Board of Trustees:

On behalf of the Board of Trustees and the Inaugural Committee, I should first like to extend warmest greetings of the College to all of you who are participating with us in this Inaugural Convocation. Today we formally begin a new academic year, and a new chapter in the history of Lasell with the induction of Dr. Greene into the presidency, and we are gratified by the interest and enthusiasm of all who have worked with Dean Babcock to make this occasion possible.

As the oldest two-year college for women in the United States, Lasell has always been acutely conscious of her role as a pioneer in a wide variety of pre-professional and liberal arts fields. We are proud of the way in which Lasell has responded to the educational challenges of successive generations in the twelve decades of her existence. As all of us know, the need for change is not always visible to everyone, and the processes of change and adjustment to the needs of a rapidly evolving society may at times seem traumatic, even painful. Pride in the traditions of our institutions is a source of reassurance and a moral bulwark against the feelings of alienation and aimlessness that pervade much of this troubled world.

May I suggest to you, and especially to the young and impatient among you, that tradition is not necessarily an evil word, that change, only for the sake of change is no virtue; and that much of our success in the future depends on how well we utilize the experience of the past; on how much we learn from our mistakes, and on how firmly we can build on what has been of value to us before.

Yet we know that pride alone, pride in our traditions alone, is not enough. We must be sure that our traditions work; that the values and standards that have proven to be of such worth to Lasell in the past, are continuing to be effective today. We believe we are fortunate in our choice of a teacher and administrator who can guide us in this continuing process of self-evaluation and adjustment to the challenges that will face us in the 1970's. We believe in the future of Lasell and we celebrate this morning the arrival of a president whose energy and integrity and foresight have already given us reason for renewed faith in that future.

And so, as we mark the beginning of a new academic year, a new decade, and a new administration with the installation of President Greene, we welcome all of you who are also new members of the Lasell community, students, faculty and staff. May your years at Lasell be happy and rewarding ones, as you work with us to maintain that unique position that Lasell has so long occupied in the education of young women.

From the Alumnae, Mrs. Norman P. Fitch, President of Lasell Alumnae, Inc.

On behalf of Lasell Alumnae, Inc., it gives me personal pleasure to welcome you, Dr. Kenneth M. Greene, as the fifth President of Lasell Junior College. Our Lasell alumnae body is comprised of over 10,000 girls representing each state in the union and many countries throughout the world. Since our association was formed in 1875 we have been primarily interested in serving the needs of the College among our alumnae, students, faculty, and administration. Dr. Greene, may we welcome you and your family to the Lasell family, offer you our co-operation, and wish you a most successful administration.

From the Faculty, Dr. Richard M. Packard, Chairman of the Department of History and Political Economy:

Dr. Greene, it seems to me and to many of my colleagues that your success as president of Lasell will depend substantially upon the dedication of the faculty to the larger interests of the college. All teachers must be willing to serve on committees and to work—to show the falsity of the statement of one of our former presidents that faculty members forever complain but when given responsibility do not come through. We must attend faculty meetings and stay to the bitter end. We must appreciate, as McGeorge Bundy points out, the great value of good administrators who make it possible for teachers to spend most of their time in teaching. Like the students, faculty members must keep on hating injustice and war, must place themselves against possible violence on campus, must continue to push for reform at Lasell through free speech, reason and persuasion. In general, they must work, as President Pusey said, to get rid of encrusted sham and revitalize the institution. We have ample justification for pessimism about the future of mankind and to be against much in the Establishment. But we and the students and you together must decide what we are for.

President Greene, speaking from some small personal experience, I know that you have a more difficult job than any of the teachers here, for you will feel the pressure from five groups of constituents—faculty, students, administrators, trustees and alumnae. To some degree, you will have to satisfy them all. Partly as a result of the events of last spring, you may not have to deal with trustee intervention in the day-by-day life of the college, but you still must win trustee support for your decisions on how to spend tuition money and how to raise new income. You probably have already discovered that you must face the delicate task of a revision of our administration. As for the heart and center of the college, the faculty and students, you will have to listen continuously and attentively to what they have to say, considering seriously the merits of the ideas presented and trying to put those best founded into effect. This means that you will have to reconcile the younger and older faculty members, the moderate and activist students, and various factions in the alumnae, while carrying out reforms which may not wholly please any of these groups.

Above all, Dr. Greene, we teachers and all those connected with Lasell look to you to enlarge the hope that your presence here has encouraged in us. People the world over are grasping at any basis for a reasonable hope that man and nature can heal their destructive tendencies. In Maine this summer I took a little comfort from the news that a few salmon returned to the Penobscot River and that a few fish hawks hatched out living young. At Lasell we need very much to foster the hope that by co-operating with you we can together make this college survive and improve. We like what we have seen of you already; we like your commitment to educational excellence; we want to meet you more than half-way. So with apologies to St. Paul, we would give you this charge: Watch ye, stand fast in faith, quit you like a man, be strong. Let all your things be done with charity.

From the students, Sandra Boys,
President of the College Government Association:

I am most honored to be meeting here today to welcome Dr. Kenneth Greene, our new-found president and friend.

For the present senior class, the lack of a full-time president has left a great want in our campus life. Dean Babcock assumed the role of acting president and very successfully executed her duties in that capacity. So you see we are not only gaining a new president, but we also have a very devoted dean.

Rightfully this day belongs to Dr. Greene but it also belongs to Lasell Junior College. We have entered into a new realm of thought, ideas, and goals. A time like this demands strong minds, great hearts, true hope and willing hands. We must now and always, renew, rejuvenate ourselves and realize the vitalizing, strengthening influence of one another.

We all feel most fortunate to have the traditional presidential house become a home, and a group become a family once more. While the main burden and center of campus activity must be with us, we shall need the aid, the encouragement, the guidance, that the strong can give the weak, the mature can give the inexperienced. Thus we will be helping one another.

And so, Dr. Greene, I say with Wordsworth: "Naught shall prevail against us, nor disturb our cheerful faith that all that we behold is full of blessing."

From the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, Frank A. Tredinnick, Jr., Executive Director:

It is my privilege to extend my greetings to Lasell and Dr. Greene on behalf of the more than 900 schools, colleges, and universities of the New England Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, all 900 I might add, equally esteemed by Attorney General and Mrs. Mitchell.

President Greene, on behalf of the Association, in addition to what has been wished today, may I express the hope, that I would express to all educational leaders today. May your institution be endowed with the sometimes elusive virtues such as: aspects of wisdom in the students, vision in the Board of Trustees, humility in the faculty and forbearance and understanding in the alumnae body. And may you, sir, in your high office find stimulus in challenge, courage in adversity, reward in the many accomplishments of your students and your faculty, and above all, may you find time, at least occasionally, for that kind of reflection and introspection that will refresh and sustain you and your colleagues.

I salute you on this auspicious day as a friend, and as a colleague, and I congratulate Lasell on the acumen of its selection committee and on its general institutional good fortune in enlisting the leadership of Dr. Kenneth Greene.

From the City of Newton,
The Honorable Monte G. Basbas, Mayor:

I have a prepared statement which of course is the proper thing for such an occasion, but it's a beautiful day, more like commencement weather than the first of October, I will hand this to Dr. Greene, ask him to read my comments at some future date and just say that it's a pleasure always to come here to Lasell. We love you dearly. Those of us in government look upon Lasell with a great deal of pride. We look at you young ladies and we say, now that you are involved in the women's lib movement, remember that we at Newton City government have more than 27 young ladies in positions of direction, policy-making, not clerical necessarily, Chairman of the Board of Assessors, for example, things of that sort, so we are working with you and we agree with your programs of the future. So, if you feel like marching, come up and see me—and I'd love to have you.

I congratulate Lasell Junior College for having selected such a fine individual. I had the privilege of breaking bread with Dr. Greene a very short time ago, and I think that you will all accept him and love him just as much as those of us who realized when we met him just how great he'd be for not only Lasell Junior College, but for the City of Newton.

The marriage of town and gown is not always a happy one. But I must say to you very explicitly, very clearly, that the marriage of town and gown, as far as the City of Newton and Lasell Junior College is concerned, has always been a very happy one and I'm proud to have had some part of it.

I would like at this time to present to you, Dr. Greene, the official key to the city, as a welcome to the city. As a matter of fact, I mentioned once before this will not open the treasury of the City of Newton to you. That's an old cliché that I've used, right now with the oil problem, and since I'm about to issue a request to your college and to other institutions and industry to refrain from using more oil, young ladies, than you need to, by keeping your heat down to let's say 65 rather than 68, by turning off the electricity to conserve power, the key will not give you an open door to the fuel shortage, but it will open our hearts to you Dr. Greene and wish for you all the best in the administration of your office for many, many years.

The Installation of the President;
Mrs. Rosen delivering the charge on behalf of the Board of Trustees:

Kenneth Myron Greene, the trustees have selected you to be the chief executive of Lasell Junior College because they admire your proven ability as a teacher and administrator and respect the depth of your concern for the problems that face all of us in higher education today; particularly your awareness of the difficult choices young people must make for themselves in a world that is increasingly complex and accelerated in nearly all of its aspects, and your avowed dedication to high academic and professional standards.

We stand in a troubled time in the development of American education, when the winds of change and the voices of conflict and dissent have swept across many campuses, including our own, and the years ahead will surely bring many challenges, many tests of our staying power, many trials of our capacity to deal with problems and issues we cannot at present perhaps even conceive. But we trust that the tributes we have heard to your qualities of leadership and the pledges of support from your colleagues in all areas of the college's life, auger well for your years of stewardship and for the creation under your guidance of a new sense of community at Lasell.

We welcome you to the Lasell family, as the tenth head of our institution and its fifth president, with confidence and with hope. Therefore by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Board of Trustees, I present to you, Kenneth Myron Greene, the charter of this institution and with your acceptance declare you, Kenneth Myron Greene, to be the fifth president of Lasell.

ADDRESS, PRESIDENT KENNETH M. GREENE

Madam Chairman, distinguished guests, members and friends of the Lasell community, I thank you for your most cordial welcome and expressions of confidence, and hope that my conduct of the sensitive and important office I have assumed will justify the kind remarks that you've made today. You will perhaps not be surprised to know that when I considered what I could say on this occasion, my thoughts turned naturally to experiences in my past that might have particular impact on my responsibilities. I recalled, for instance, how, when I started out in academic life as an English instructor, one of my most nagging obligations, it seemed to me, was to come up with good topics for the weekly themes my students were supposed to write. In my more despondent moments I would think how lucky the students were: they only had to write the themes not devise the topics. At one point in my first year, a sympathetic colleague offered me counsel. Leaning back in his chair and casually flicking cigarette ashes on a huge pile of ungraded papers, he advised me that when in doubt I could always use the old "Head and Heart" theme topic—that is the conflict of head (or reason) and heart (or feeling). He assured me that it would fit practically any book we happened to be reading in class, and as proof he pulled out a worn sheet of paper and read from a list of topics he had been using for years: "Conflict of Head and Heart in Return of the Native"; "Babbitt: a study of the conflict of head and heart"; "Jane Austen's Sense and Sensibility: a demonstration of the head and heart conflict"; and so the list went . . . Tom Jones, Death of a Salesman, H.M. Pulham, Esq., Fathers and Sons, Sons and Lovers, Lady Chatterley's Lover, and on and on.

Under the spell of this cynical mentor, I almost came to believe that the conflict of head and heart—or the conflict of reason and feeling—was something that occurred only in books. But as the years passed (and as I acquired enough inventiveness in devising theme topics to relieve my anxiety), I quietly noted how often the conflict of head and heart entered into decisions I had to make in real life. And as I have sat at the president's desk here at Lasell this summer, pondering over decisions that have to be made and courses of action that must be chosen, I have had occasion more than once to reflect on that old conflict and to realize how central it is to many of the problems we are facing.

This is so partly because of the nature of a collegiate community and partly because of the economic, social, and political pressures exerted on that community by the world in which it exists.

The college community is made up of many different constituencies—students, faculty, administrators, staff, trustees, alumnae—each with different—sometimes slightly different, sometimes vastly different perceptions of the college. Perceptions of the college as it was, as it is, as it should be. Strong practical considerations on one side are almost bound to conflict with strong emotional considerations on another. And to complicate matters further, there may be emotional positions conflicting among themselves, and there may be corresponding conflict among different rational positions.

Leaving aside these kinds of complications for the moment, however, I imagine that our primary concern will be to keep the practical and emotional—that is, the head and heart—in balance. In this hope I am comforted by having read in Professor Packard's commencement address of last June a reminder to the college of its duty "to defend objectivity and rationality against sentimentality and blind fanaticism." I heartily endorse his recommendation to the faculty that it protect Lasell, through its vigilance, against "hazy romanticism."

I think sometimes that we need to be reminded, too, that sentimentality is not necessarily confined to the most obvious examples—and old grad's fondness for Bragdon Hall, say, or an undying attachment to the senior prom. There are all kinds of sentimentalities, including attachments to certain concepts of teaching or certain forms of governance. From these attachments we must free ourselves at least long enough to make a rational appraisal of learning and teaching and governing processes. Because a certain course has always been taught by the lecture method is no infallible reason why it should continue to be taught that way. And just as there is nothing sacred about a lecture, so there is nothing sacred about a seminar, or having three class meetings a week, or about preserving a certain ratio of teachers to students, or about departmental hierarchies, or about the social rules that govern student life.

But this does not mean that our collective responses to these issues— if and when they become issues—should be impulsive and hazily romantic. We simply must exercise sound judgment; we must consider the consequences of our decisions and provide ourselves with the best chances for making the best decisions.

I rather imagine that at the outset of this decade, Lasell is going to need direction somewhat more from the head than from the heart. My initial assessment of the college indicates to me that it desperately needs a systematic appraisal of its present condition and character which together with a wise reading of the future of the world in which we are going to have to exist will form the basis for an intelligent long-range institutional plan. Already this summer the Long-Range Planning Committee has embarked on the first phase of what might be called a systems approach to our problems. At the request of that committee we have begun to compile the statistical profile of our present condition. We are, in short, trying to understand precisely where we are now so that we may plan systematically our course for the future.

If this seems to smack more of the head than of the heart, I fear it must. Unfortunately the times do not encourage the luxury of sentimentality. This is a time when some colleges are closing down, when other colleges are forced to such drastic steps as freezing salaries and reducing the size of faculties in order to survive.

The reasons for this sort of emergency are not hard to find. On the one hand there are pressures on the colleges to expand and change: the growing college population, for instance; the rapidly changing demands for new programs; the students' dissatisfaction with irrelevant learning experiences. On the other hand there are pressures that make expansion and change hard or downright impossible to achieve: namely, the growing dissatisfaction of constituencies such as alumnae and various government agencies whose financial support is crucial to the expansion and enrichment of collegiate programs; and, of course, the rising costs of operating an institution.

The college, in short, is under pressure to expand and change at the same time that it is faced with rising costs and diminishing budgets. When this happens, as Economist Richard Brien points out in an article in the Educational Record, "the institution is up against a management crisis. At some time in the life cycle of virtually every organization, its ability to succeed in spite of itself runs out. That is precisely where many American colleges and universities find themselves today."

As you may guess, Professor Brien's article recommends certain management concepts and techniques—specifically the sort of systems approach I referred to a few minutes ago. And jargon aside, I think we must agree that Lasell needs a plan that really means something.

If I needed any evidence to convince me of this fact, I got it very quickly at the beginning of my term of office. One morning this summer, the Newton Graphic announced to the world that Lasell had received preliminary approval of a government loan of $1,005,000 for the construction of a new dormitory. You can imagine with what elation I heard the news (not to mention my surprise at having got it first from the Newton Graphic). In any case, I was overjoyed. That we need all the new dormitories we can get is hardly debatable.

But the elation soon cooled down as it became evident that we might not be able to accept the loan. To go fully into the exhaustive investigation we made of every possible avenue of financing, to share with you the details of the expert advice we sought and received would take too long. Suffice it to say that partly because the loan would not cover the full cost of the building and partly because we do not have the money to make up the difference or the prospect of getting it (without slighting other priorities) within the time limit stipulated by the terms of the loan, I was forced to recommend that the Board of Trustees turn it down.

I cite this example not to dampen your spirits, but rather to illustrate the kinds of hard decisions that must be made and the need for planning that will at least minimize the chances of our finding ourselves in such a predicament again.

On the hopeful side I can assure you that there are other ways to accomplish our goals and that we are exploring them even now. We need not lose heart, nor need we lose our heads.

In a new biography of Sir Walter Scott, I came across a passage that seems to apply to our case. The biographer notes that Scott was long categorized as a romantic. But this biographer does not think this is an accurate pegging of Scott, whose head ruled his heart more often than not and who was pragmatic if not downright stoical about the writing business. When he learned from his publisher James Ballantyne that the sales of his long poem "The Lord of the Isles" were disappointing, Scott replied: "Well, well, James, so be it—but you know we must not droop, for we can't afford to give over. Since one line has failed, we must just try something else."

It is worth noting too that the something else that Scott tried was "Waverly" and the thirty-one novels that succeeded it—writing ventures that made Scott a great success and a wealthy man.

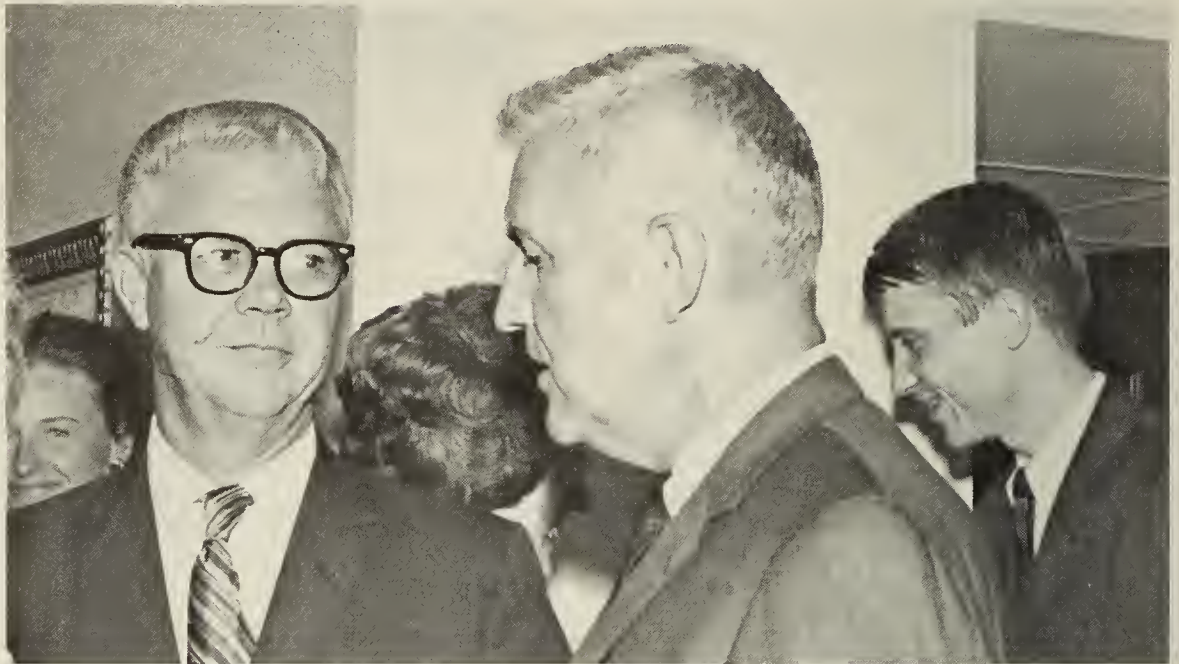

The moral of the story is, perhaps, that we need a forceful combination of head and heart. We must not, indeed, droop. And as we try the something else, let us bring all our wisdom to bear on the decisions we have to make and let us keep the delicate balance between head and heart.

INAUGURAL RECEPTION

President and Mrs. Greene were introduced to presidents of other colleges in the Boston area at the Lasell Suite of the Marriott Motor Hotel in Newton on the day following his inauguration. Dr. William E. Park, who was President of Simmons College while Dr. Greene was Chairman of its Department of Education, and Mrs. David Rosen, as Chairman of the Lasell Board of Trustees, received college presidents and their wives from more than 20 institutions in the Boston area. Seen here are: (left) President and Mrs. Greene; (below) Dr. Burton C. Hallowell, President of Tufts University, talking with Dr. Frederick C. Ferry, Jr., President of Pine Manor Junior College, and to the right, Lasell trustee Bruce B. Bredehoff; (lower left) Dr. Park and Dr. Mary I. Bunting, President of Radcliffe College, with Dr. Greene; and (lower right) Mrs. Rosen and Dr. Park.

*Alumna Trustee - contribution included within class

The Western Massachusetts and Southern California Alumnae Clubs directed this year's contributions directly to the Alumnae Building Fund. California's treasurer remarked: "a little trickle now and then may actually result in a big pool."

ALUMNAE DAUGHTERS ARRIVE

Among the twelve alumnae daughters and granddaughters in the class of 1972 were the following new students as they arrived and were greeted by Dr. and Mrs. Greene at a reception for freshmen and their parents on opening day of the College: first, Pamela Ross whose grandmother was Thelma Blossom '21 and Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Ross; below left, Victoria Ely with Mr. and Mrs. Roy A. Ely (Martha Stonebraker '45); and on the right, Margo Dickson and Mrs. Charles B. Dickson (Paula Maue x-'41) meet Dr. Greene.

CLASS NOTES

Although none of us could attend our 60th Reunion, we have had a special reunion in the form of a Round Robin letter. Of the twenty-seven graduates of 1910, eight of us are enjoying annual "visits" via the interesting letters and pictures of children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

This year we failed to contact four classmates—Cornelia Stone, Mary Gallaher Catlin, Nell Carneal Drew and Eleanor Laurens McCrady. Julia terKuile Brown is not well and did not join the Round Robin. On May 9th we lost another active member, Julia Crafts Sheridan.

Marion Hale Bottomley

1. Jo Woodward Rand: Always a loyal Lasellian. Jo is co-director of our letter and keeps abreast of the times at the College. In 1969 she was a Lasell Medallion recipient. She has three sons and one grandchild. Hobbies include, art, books, and antiques.

2. Mildred Snyder Grant: Lives in New Orleans and until recently was connected with the Thetas at Newcomb College. Mildred has six grandchildren.

3. Julia Hamilton Peters: Spends the summer months in Great Falls, Montana; winters at Coronado Beach, California. She has a son, two daughters, eleven grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Julia and her husband recently celebrated their 56th wedding anniversary.

4. Irma Levi Levy: A Sarasota, Florida resident. Her oldest grandson is studying law and the younger is teaching in a school for the mentally retarded. A third grandson is a student at the University of Florida; her granddaughter attends high school. Irma also has three grandsons in Houston, Texas.

5. Mildred Goodall Fairbanks: Has a lovely home in Miami Beach. Her husband passed away a year ago, and it has changed her life for they were very keen about dancing and golf. One time on a dance floor Mildred was mistaken for Irene Castle. Mildred has twelve grandchildren and two great-grandchildren. Until recently she has been an active volunteer at the Miami Heart Clinic.

6. Tot McLean Hunt: Busy and happy in Dallas, Texas—swims, plays bridge and travels. Had a great time entertaining Mildred Snyder's and Lucy Aldrich's grandsons. Last summer House and Garden Magazine printed a feature story on the Texas home of Tot's son.

7. Margherita Dike Halberg: Now lives in Laguna Hills, California. Both her son and daughter live back East; there are seven grandchildren. Margherita is a great traveler—her most recent tour included Australia and New Zealand. While in the Chicago area, she was a faithful member of the area Alumnae Club—sent pictures of Helene Grashorn Dickson '22, Julia Potter Schmidt '06, Mary-Florine Thielens Peeples x-'06 and Alice Wry Anthony '24.

8. Marion Hale Bottomley: As acting Class Secretary, it has been a great pleasure to keep the Class Letter moving. I live with my daughter Mary (Lasell '42) and keep busy doing volunteer work at our medical center patient's library. Last winter I spent three months in Florida—away from the "deep freeze" of Vermont. While in Sarasota, I had a very happy ten days with Julia Crafts Sheridan; we both enjoyed frequent visits with Irma Levi Levy. My older daughter lives in Connecticut and has two children—Brett, 15, a student at the Kent School; and Melissa, 13, engrossed in horses and riding.

Ruth Marjorie Risser Blackwell's letter is addressed to Alumnae Fund Chairman Louise Tardivel Higgins: "When this day dawned as perfectly as June 11, 1912, I was carried back to our commencement, and when the postman brought your letter, I surely felt you were helping me celebrate our 58th Reunion. Thank you!

"Hope this year's Fund campaign is a most successful one. Cheers for all you are doing."

The Class extends sincere sympathy to Ruth Coulter Bierer, whose husband, John M. Bierer, passed away on July 8, 1970. Mary Ward Lucci '69 is a granddaughter.

Nell Woodward Collins comments on the recent 1915 Class Round Robin letter:

Congratulations are in order for Madeline Farmer Ryder for being chosen in June 1970 to receive the Medallion given by the Alumnae Association for "adding distinction to the name of Lasell." 1915 is very proud of our classmate, who so richly deserves this honor.

Irene Ball Sill is now in better health than she has been for several years. She has enjoyed many happy times during the year with her daughters and their families.

Elizabeth Beach Bierer was invited to go to Endland last spring with her daughter and family—we hope she went. She wrote that her granddaughter was considering Lasell—again, we hope so!

Katharine Bingaman Heron and sister Hannah (Bingaman '14) have a new address: 1038 Park Avenue, Plainfield, N.J. Both girls travel a great deal and have visited several Lasell friends, among whom are Carolyn Moore '14 and Dot Crane Crowe '16.

One of Ada Patterson's three nurses wrote a note for her to be enclosed with the Class Letter. Our "Go-Go Girl" is far from well; will not be able to take further cruises. Pat always wrote most vivid accounts of her travels.

Our heartfelt sympathy goes to Florence Evans Valpey in the loss of her husband last June. Flos, however, has wonderful faith and is adjusting to her changed life magnificently.

Margrethe Bauman, the same old Peg, is always very thoughtful of others. We are glad her sister, Helen Bauman Roblin '17, and husband are Peg's near neighbors in Grayling, Mich.

Myrtle Brix Spangler is very proud of her three great-grandsons. She keeps busy with Red Cross work; helps with retarded children. "Billy" misses the lovely garden of her former home, but "makes do" with the pent-house garden.

Katherine Hoag Norgren and husband keep well and busy in their home; thoroughly enjoy their daughter and her family. "K" continues her interest in music and various civic affairs.

Ethel Murray Kuykendall finds that her children and grandchildren help her to forget the "physical" troubles.

Last winter Clara Paton Suhlke had the pleasure of attending the Southern Florida Lasell Club Luncheon. She enjoyed the party in spite of being the "oldest" member present. But . . . Clara can never grow old!

Vilette Peck Crawshaw is high among us for "carrying on" when the road gets rough. She has written many lovely poems, including this recent one enclosed in our Class Letter:

A Lesson from the Sea

*One day, I sat on the sandy shore
All I could hear was the breakers' roar.*

The waves rolled in with their caps of white;

I was fascinated by the awesome sight!

Sometimes my mind is turbulent too

And unruly thoughts come rushing through

But I know that the ocean will again be calm

And I believe God will keep me from harm.

So a lesson is learned from the mighty sea

And it can bring peace to you and to me.

Ida Beane Rice has had a hard fight getting back to normal after being felled by polio two years ago. We are delighted that through her faith in God and by the encouragement of her own family and by her unwavering determination, she is getting back. She regretted so much the fact that this year she could not help with her favorite project, The Halfway House for Unfortunate Women.

Nell Woodward Collins is happy to report that her sister, Jo Woodward Rand '10, is recovering from last winter's serious fall and is beginning to walk without support. Jean Woodward Nelson '22 has a new address: Apt. 2-B, 665 South Alton Way, Denver, Colo. All three sisters send best wishes to Lasell friends.

'16

Wilda Berkey Cartland has moved to Orlando, Fla.—nearby daughter Joy Cartland Fowler x-'45.

'17

Carita Palmer Moffett sends word of her recent marriage and new address. She and Mr. Everett L. Clinard were married on May 9, 1970 at the home of Carita's daughter, Eloise Moffett Harper '43, in Indianapolis. The Clinards' now live at 16 West Harrison Avenue, Charleston, Illinois 61920.

Grey skies, chill rain, and a strong East wind failed to dampen the picnic spirit at Mid Strain Nutter's annual Pocasset party on August 11. Guests arrived in time for morning coffee, much chatter, indoor picnic luncheon and more chatter. Attending were Cape neighbors Ruth Irwin Rix and Theodora A. Tower (Phys. Ed. Dept. '61-'68) and Lasellites Helen Saunders '17, Jess Shepherd Brennan '17, Marion Nutter Bredehoft '55, Marion Griffin Wolcott '16, Beulah Coward Boardman '18, Mabel Straker Kimball '16, Freda Griffin Leining '20, Mercie Nichols '19, Ethel Ramage Lougee '19, Dorothy Crane Crowe '16, Dorothy Meeker Pearce '30, Dorothy Mosher Stone '42, Rosalie Brightman Rosen '27, Barbara Cole French '61, Suzanne Clark '55, Ruth Lindquist Brinton and "Miss Mac" McClelland. Generous contributions provided a substantial addition to the Alumnae Building Fund.

'21

Doris Brown Bergin and her husband enjoyed a spring motor trip from California to Florida. "Stopping to say 'hello' to our many friends we hadn't seen for years. In Naples, Florida, we had a delightful evening with Kay Rice Brook '20 and her husband. We flew to Panama—then on to San Jose, Costa Rica, where Ana Clark Keith '22 and her husband met us at the airport.

Recently we spent a delightful afternoon with Thelma Blossom Ross and her husband. They have a lovely Spanish type house here in Santa Barbara.

*Doris Brown Bergin '21 and Ana Clark Keith '22
San Jose, Costa Rica—Spring '70*

In August we will be in Michigan and plan to see my roommate Mabel Vernon Eidner from Ft. Wayne, Indiana. We will also see Ruth Rawlings Mott in Flint.

Our plans for June 1971—to attend my 50th Reunion! Thelma and her husband are also making the same plans."

'23

Jeannette Merrick Moss writes to Toni Meritt Smith: "Liz (Buettner Lang and I enjoyed a delightful cruise together last winter on the North German Lloyd Line. On our 'free' day at St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands, we met Caroline Smith Goodwin '35; it was most interesting how we discovered we were all Lasell alumnae. Caroline's husband was fascinated with the chit-chat, and insisted that he take a picture which might be of interest for the Leaves."

Weddings:

Maude A. Wilcox and Edgar J. Hanley on June 13, 1970 in Westbrook, Conn.

To Helen Perry came this word from Eleanor Parsons Macurda: "You certainly have retained fine class spirit—after all these years—to write personal notes to class members. My husband retired as a vice-president of the First National City Bank on Fifth Avenue five years ago. He had had a heart attack in 1954, recovered very well but six years ago we decided to give up the 'Rat Race.' We moved to La Mesa and are enjoying California living.

"Our eldest son received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin and is now an Assistant Professor of geology at the University of Michigan. Our second son holds two degrees from Cal Tech—one in engineering and one in physics. Our daughter went to Japan as an exchange student during her junior year of college. After graduating she attended Stanford University where she majored in Asian Studies. Stanford sent her to Japan for a year; she returned to work on her Master of Arts Degree, which she was awarded this spring. She was one of 60 out of over 300 to be chosen as a guide at the U.S. Pavilion at Expo '70 in Osaka.

"My husband and I love to travel—have had trips to the South Seas by ship with stopovers in New Zealand and Australia. Our daughter met us in Vienna on her way home from Japan; we bought a VW and toured Europe and the British Isles, with time out for a 21-day tour of the Scandinavian countries. The year before last my husband and I enjoyed a cruise of the Greek Islands, the land tour of Greece, rented a car in Italy to see the Lakes; then joined a tour for three weeks in Spain and Portugal. Last fall we drove to Maine—came home via the Smokies.

"It was a shock to be reminded that our 50th Reunion is not too far away!"

'25

New officers for the Class of 1925 are: Secretary: Helen Wahlquist, Mrs. Henry R. Shennings, Route 3, Box 968, Fort Myers, Florida 33901 and Agent: Gertrude Kendall, Mrs. Henry G. Lund, 81 Eunice Avenue, Worcester, Mass. 01606.

The Class extends sincere sympathy to Barbara Cushing Jenkins whose husband passed away very suddenly on August 2, 1970.

'26

In mid-July Margaret "Andy" Anderson Gage wrote from Sacramento: "Upon our return from a five-week trip to the Pacific Northwest, including an eight-day cruise to the Inside Passage of Alaska on the Norwegian Meteor, I found the recent issue of the Leaves. For the third or fourth consecutive time there were no personal items for the Class of 1926. Could be we are all dead—or half so—and just don't know it!

"However, a few of us on the West Coast have been together. Last October Dot Hale Brown came for a visit from Fayetteville, N.Y.; in April Minerva Damon Ludewig '27 came over from San Francisco for the weekend. Later this summer my first-year Lasell roommate, Frances Vail Pollack x-'26, will come from southern California to spend a week.

"I return to my 14th year of teaching kindergarten in September. Perhaps this note will bring forth a response from other classmates. Do hope so—I still cherish fond memories of my two happy years at Lasell."

'30

In April Doris Hatch Rand was awarded first prize in the Town Show sponsored by the Marblehead Arts Association. Doris has studied at the Boston University Art School; was a pupil of Don Stone and Joseph Santoro. In the years 1968 and 1969 she had the distinction of winning First Prize at the Marblehead Festival of Arts. She is currently teaching a water color class for the Marblehead Arts Association.

'31

Louise "Tap" Tardivel Higgins '37 and Elizabeth "Babe" Beamer Dahlberg '37

4, 1970, but she came as close to it as most people ever will. Mary, chief dietitian at the Somerset Hospital (Somerville, N.J.) for the past 24 years, had a portion of the hospital's new million-dollar wing dedicated in her honor.

The section of the hospital that now officially "belongs" to Mary—as it has unofficially since 1946—is the spacious new dietary department. Expansion and modernization of the department, which includes a new employee cafeteria is the first major renovation to be made to that area of the hospital since 1944 when it was a 170-bed facility. Today the hospital has 320 beds and the dietary department has 80 employees, compared to the 15 Miss O'Connell supervised when she came to Somerset to take over the job of feeding the hospital's patients and employees.

Hospital Administrator Nelson O. Lindley knew that had Mary been aware of what was afoot she would not have been present to hear the tribute to her long service to the hospital and to receive the bouquet of long-stemmed red roses as a symbol of the event.

(Administrator Lindley is the husband of Priscilla Chapple '40, and to quote Mary—"they are two of my most favorite people." Ed.)

'32

The Class extends sincere sympathy to Janet Kennedy Chapman x-'32, whose husband, Clark Chapman, Jr., passed away on May 27, 1970. He was associated with his father in the Portland law firm of Chapman, Chapman and Gardner and was vice president of the Cumberland County Bar Association.

Nancy Fowler Marshall writes from Durham, N.C.: "In September Randy, Jr. begins study for his Ph.D. in Education at Chapel Hill. Florence, our daughter (19), has been attending St. Andrew's in Laurinburg — has changed her idea of teaching as a profession and is now concentrating on the secretarial field. Regards to all Lasell friends."

'33

For years, the dynamic oils and watercolors of Jane Spear have delighted a select group of close friends, including both fellow artists and critics.

A most successful show was held on Saturday and Sunday, September 20-21, 1969 at Jane's Chicago apartment.

'34

This quick June note from Carol Morehouse Jones: "Daughter Kathy, Lasell '67, was graduated last week from Cornell School of Nursing in New York City. We are very proud and happy parents. Kathy is working at the Easton (Penna.) Hospital for two months; then she and three friends will take a motor trip out West, camping along the way. In October she will begin her duties at New York Hospital, a part of the Cornell complex in the City."

'36

Doris Shipman Edge is the instructor for a Livingston (N.J.) Student Development Program course titled "Merry Masques." This course teaches creative dramatics for the older child. Doris attended the Ellen Cole Felter School of Drama in New York City for three years. Her experience includes former membership in the East Orange, Bloomfield and Livingston Little Theater. She has served as vice-president of the New Jersey Theater League and at present serves as drama chairman for the Women's Club of Livingston.

Doris has directed productions for the YMCA, Scouts, CYO, and children's theater groups throughout the state. For the past five years she has been associated with Jefferson Lake Day Camp in Stanhope, New Jersey, where she teaches speech and acting techniques to over 500 students a season and produces a full-scale musical comedy each summer.

Jane Hutchison Wulfinf sent regrets for her 30th Reunion and added: "Sorry I can't make it but Gretchen will be home from the University of Denver in early June. Christine, Lasell x-'67, now married, lives in Greenfield Center, N.Y. John, Jr. and wife are in Carthage, Ill. I do some volunteer hospital work, but life as a widow leaves much to be desired. Have shed the headaches of a house —am enjoying a town-house apartment at 1340 Manorlac Drive, St. Louis, Mo.

Affectionate greetings to 1940 Reunioners!"

On Saturday, June 6, 1970, at the Auburndale Church of the Messiah, Janet Lynne Crosby became the bride of Rodney Richard Stewart. Barbara Crosby was maid of honor for her sister; the bride's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Richard A. Crosby (Ruth Turner).

Gini Robinson Nast tells us that Dot Higson White's daughter, Martha, and her husband, Frank, have graduated from College; are happily settled in Pompano Beach, Fla. Dot's son, Ozzie, a student at Brown University, has had a unique summer occupation—working at a yacht club on France's Normandy coast.

Barbara Collester Moore forwards her new address: Lake Boulevard, Whispering Pines, N.C. 28327. "We have semi-retired to North Carolina where we are really enjoying life among the pines and lakes in this beautiful state. With our airplane, we feel we're central on the east coast—four and a half hours to Florida, four and a half hours to Massachusetts."

Dorothy Bentley Grant and Mr. Percy S. Nichols on June 20, 1969.

Mr. and Mrs. William J. Gillerlain (Ann Preuss) announce the marriage of her daughter, Deborah Ann Olson, to Gerald A. Gagliardi on Saturday, September 5, 1970 in New Canaan, Conn. Deborah is completing her senior year at the Syracuse University School of Art.

'44

Barbara Goodwin Flint has served as this year's President of the Melrose (Mass.) Phi Theta Xi Sorority. For over twenty-one years, the Sorority has presented an annual summer Country Fair and Carnival as a benefit for the Melrose-Wakefield Hospital.

'47

Paintings by Dorothy Papani Palmer will be shown during the month of September at Bare Cove Gallery, Hingham, Mass.

'48

Marjorie Weinman Sharmat x-'48 is the author of "Gladys Told Me To Meet Her Here," published by Harper's Junior Books Department in May 1970.

'49

From Jane Wadhams Hazen: "Here is a news item for the Class of 1949! I ran into Barbara Davis Canterbury at the Motor Vehicles Department where we both were accompanying our 16-year-old daughters as they faced the rigorous driving tests of the State of Connecticut. (Both girls passed!) Barbara is working part-time as a lecturer for a paint company—giving tips on color, interior decoration, etc. She has recently returned from New York where her husband accompanied her on her business trip! She looks great and is as sweet as always.

Our oldest daughter, Elizabeth, will be a freshman math major at Russell Sage College this fall."

Eva Laitinen Stromski writes: "Took a year off from teaching and have earned a Master of Education degree from Boston University. It took 21 years after those glorious Lasell days (I must be a slow learner!) but requirements are now completed.

Ann Van der Veer Lander and Willis Craig Bradley on August 8, 1970.

Evelyn Claire Quinzani Kerins requested a transcript of her Lasell record to be sent to Citrus College, Azusa, Calif. She adds: "We have been living in Glendora at 1341 Pebble Springs Lane for over two years and love it. Our son, Don, Jr., enters the first year of high school in September; Kathy is a darling three-year-old angel. Sister, Catherine (Quinzani '50), has recently completed requirements for a degree at Framingham (Mass.) State and is most enthusiastic about her new teaching career. Would love to hear from Lasell friends."

Joan Stillwell Smith's recent letter is dated Scottsdale, Arizona, July 2, 1970: "Have appeared in some ten-odd commercials on what is referred to as 'regional' meaning Southwest region of the United States. One national appeared three years ago for Lipton Tea. One motion picture is to my credit for M.G.M.—'Zabriskie Point'; and presently I am being considered for Stanley Kramer's new movie 'Bless the Beasts and Children.' High Chapparral called last week for me to interview for an episode, but I was in Mexico with the family. Next time, maybe! Under consideration also for new movie to be filmed here with Ernest Borgnine.

Enclosed you will find a sample of an ad in Time, March 9 issue. I have also appeared in 52 national newspapers as well as trade maga-

Joan Stillwell Smith '52 as she appeared in U.S. News & World Report for the Arizona Bank, and for Hayden Flour Mills—an ad which was run in various newspapers and trade magazines during '69 and '70.

the KACHINA

Spirit of the Arizona Bank. Services with a plus... bankers with a plus attitude.

Just as the Kachina symbolizes the coming of dawn, of a new day to the Hopi, so too the Kachina heralds a new day in banking. Long identified with The Arizona Bank, the Kachina now takes on a more significant meaning. It symbolizes our long-standing philosophy of giving more, doing more, then expected. We call it banking with a "plus". If you are the least bit dissatisfied with your present banking connection, or are changing residence, consider switching to The Arizona Bank. By the same token, if you are a newcomer to the area, consider selecting The Arizona Bank right from the beginning. Come in, you'll like the "give more", "do more", people-to-people attitude of The Arizona Bank. We'll be expecting you.

zines. I've made many industrial movies including Oldsmobile and most recently, Volkswagen. Film strip work is also included in my schedule. To add to the excitement, I am the Executive Secretary of the Arizona Committee of Screen Actors Guild. In fact, had luncheon yesterday with Governor Jack Williams, Dick Van Dyke and Amanda Blake. Dick Van Dyke announced his new series at the luncheon.

My children, Kathy (17), Shelly (15), Brad (14), and Jacque (12), all model for television or newspaper and magazine ads. They also appeared in a newly released Paramount movie.

With fond memories of Lasell."

Kissin' Cakes
bake fresh with Family Kitchen Flour

The white, light, made-in-Arizona flour.

Expect a kiss when you take the time to bake-it-yourself. Beautiful baking is easy when you use Hayden Family Kitchen or Rose Flour. Cakes are whiter, biscuits are lighter... everything tastes better! You know it's fresher, because it's made in Arizona in Arizona's own flour mill and climatized-blended for Arizona baking.

If you want to show someone you care, bake him his favorite from Family Kitchen or Rose Flour. And stand by. You're likely to get kissed.

Born: to Beverly Thornton Hallowell, fourth daughter, Hope, on May 7, 1970.

Barbara VanDine Robinson has been appointed group actuarial analyst in pre sale underwriting at New England Mutual Life Insurance Company. Barbara joined the firm's actuarial department in 1962.

Sixteen-year-old Robert Kalogeros is probably the only youth in Connecticut who cooked pizza pies on top of the New Mexico Rockies this summer. He was one of some 70 Boy Scouts hand picked by Scout Councils throughout the nation to attend a special "Kit Carson Men" two-week training course at the national Boy Scout Training Camp in Philmont, Cimarron, N.M.

Bob, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kalogeros (Molly McBride), loves to cook. He found the trail food—mostly dehydrated concoctions carried in Scout packs—a real challenge. So he and another friend began experimenting and came up with the pizza—setting the stage for several pizza parties on the mountain top during the exhausting but exciting two-week hike. Bob also may have the solution to weight problems, his mother noted. Pizza parties didn't hurt his waistline a bit—he lost 15 pounds in the two-weeks period—and all he had to do was hike 100 miles.

CHARLOTTE RYDER HALL BEQUEST

Charlotte Ryder Hall, president and life secretary of the Class of '08, and one of Lasell's most loyal alumnae before her death last January, has continued her support of the College in memoriam. Last month Lasell received a bequest of $35,000 as an unrestricted gift from her estate.

In acknowledging the gift, President Greene expressed particular appreciation for the unrestricted form of the bequest. There are myriad needs for additional funds in every college, he pointed out, and allowing the Administration to apply the money to those most currently pressing makes the gift doubly valuable.

Lasell has received a number of such bequests in recent years, some large, many small. All have been deeply appreciated, and recognized as generous expressions of a desire to establish some kind of living memorial.

Charlotte Ryder Hall has done exactly that. Her bequest is a testament to her life-long interest in Lasell, and a moving tribute to her desire to continue her help even beyond the limits of human life.

The image shows a handwritten musical score on aged, yellowed paper. The score is written in ink and features multiple staves, some of which are grouped together with curly braces. The notation includes various musical symbols such as treble and bass clefs, key signatures (sharps and flats), and note values. There are several handwritten annotations in italics, including "GR with great vigor", "very slowly GR fffff", "GR: Lullich Gedicht", "very slowly", and "rit". The paper has a slightly textured appearance and some minor discoloration, suggesting it is an older document. The overall layout is somewhat irregular, with the staves and annotations scattered across the page.

CLASS OF '70: SIGN IN PLEASE

The first replies to the annual placement office inquiries to last year's seniors are in, according to Director of Placement, Mrs. Juliette K. Fager. The profile of '70 compiled from these responses and distributed on campus recently as a comprehensive fact sheet, shows the whereabouts of approximately 50% of the 338-member graduating class. While more replies continue to come in, a pattern of favored choices in both careers and further study already traces several trends at work in the selections of the first class to graduate in the seventies.

Of the total responses, fifty-seven percent this year were transfer students enrolled in further study at colleges and universities nationwide. Of these, an impressive fifty-four percent elected to study in a variety of programs in education. Those focussing on elementary school teaching outnumbered all others 2 to 1; others more than once showed a continuing interest in fields of special education at unspecified grade levels, ranging from speech to art therapy and education, and teaching the mentally retarded.

The fields drawing the most liberal arts students to advanced courses were: English, psychology, and sociology and urban studies, while one student each had chosen biology, math, history, French, sculpture, and voice. One graduate reported that she had undertaken her further study of Spanish abroad, in an academic year affiliated with Bowling Green.

Two students each were extending their knowledge of nursing, photography, retailing, and interior design; while medical technology, fashion illustration, home economics, business, dental hygiene, and journalism, were chosen by one transfer student apiece.

Of the forty-three percent replying who chose employment rather than further study after graduation, pre-school education was again the most popular selection, claiming seven of those seniors reporting on their career involvement. Following close behind were: nursing, medical secretarial work, and retailing—where six graduates who answered the inquiry said they were presently trainees in merchandising programs.

Next on a scale of interest were: art design, secretarial positions in industry and education, and insurance, where secretarial and actuarial work were represented and even a field service representative reported. Secretaries and clerks in law offices, bank tellers and clerks, a sales correspondent, a broker's sales assistant, bookstore manager, waitress, and a medical transcriber also appeared on the list. Then there was an owner and operator of a craft shop, and a flight attendant and a stewardess serving two major airlines, to top it all off.

Following is the listing of these seniors and their present activities as reprinted from Mrs. Fager's first report; also included here is the supplement issued later, after a second inquiry had been sent to graduates.

JOHN ARNOLD RESIGNS AS TRUSTEE

John L. Arnold

The resignation of John L. Arnold as a trustee of the College, announced at the October meeting of the Board of Trustees, marks the end of an era for Lasell.

In 1949, when the decision was made to replace old Woodland (located on Washington Street) with a new, fire-resistant building, the financial problem was enormous, and the funds were impossible to obtain. Eventually, through Mr. Arnold's efforts, a relatively new method of financing was devised and Woodland was built. That same year, in recognition of his successful work on Lasell's behalf, Mr. Arnold was elected to the College's Board of Trustees. A year or so later he was elected Treasurer of the College.

Under his financial leadership, Lasell almost immediately embarked upon a program of physical expansion without equal in its previous 100-year history. In 1955, Wass Science Building was completed; in 1959, Ordway House; and in 1963, Wolfe Hall. Then in 1965 the Trustees voted to embark upon the most ambitious building venture to date: the construction simultaneously of a new library (financed in part by a government grant), a new dormitory, and an addition to Woodland Hall which, in fifteen years had completely outgrown both its dormitory and dining-room facilities. To accomplish this, a $1,700,000 loan was arranged, this time without the need to mortgage a single piece of Lasell property. Mr. Arnold's role in these negotiations should not be underestimated.

Fortunately for Lasell, Mr. Arnold continues in his position as Treasurer of the College. In addition, he serves as a Director of Pneumo-Dynamics Inc. of Cleveland; Atco Chemical and Industrial Corporation, New Jersey; Friends, Inc., Boston; La Touraine Co., Boston; La Maisonette, Inc., Boston; and Woodcraft Supply Corporation, Boston. He is a member of both the Massachusetts and the Federal Bar Associations and is a trustee of the Spaulding Youth Center in Tilton, New Hampshire as well as other associations.

Mrs. Elaine Cavanaugh

In Rockwell there is no one particular noise level—in fact you never can be sure just what you may hear next, or from whom. You are in a world of children's experiences, with its many crescendos from frustration to joy, and all the quick changes in between.

It is here at Lasell's Child Study Center, where the first experiences of growing and participating with others in a learning situation can be seen, that course work for child study majors comes alive in learning first-hand about teaching nursery school—and about the nursery-schoolers themselves.

CHILD STUDY GROWS

Mrs. Elaine Cavanaugh, who is the director of the Center, came to Lasell eight years ago when it had been in existence for about four years and had an average enrollment of between seven and nine four-year-olds each year. Then, as now, most of these children were from Auburndale and other nearby Newton communities and preference was given to sons and daughters of faculty members.

Today, with thirty-eight children attending—twenty-four children in two groups of threes (young and old) as well as fourteen fours—about twenty-five seniors each semester gain practice teaching experience working with one of these three groups who come to the Center two, three, and five mornings per week, respectively.

Mrs. Cavanaugh and Mrs. Muriel Sheppard, who is chairman of the child study department, agree that observation and teaching/assisting in this setting is as important as the course work they supplement. So even this year, with a total of almost 250 freshmen enrolled in the child study program, arrangements have been made for all of them to have some direct experience observing young children in a field work assignment.

As a result, about three-quarters of this group has been divided to provide tutoring at the nearby Lyman School, volunteer services at the Fernald School, or are assigned to observe at the Williams School adjacent to the campus. The remaining quarter observe and assist the full-time teaching staff of the Center, which includes alumnae Pat Ryan Cantin '63, Barbara Montag Levy '58, and Janet Hart Wilson '53.

Until this year, all of the activities of the Child Study Center have been contained in and around Rockwell, but with the addition of twelve children in the new "low 3's" group this year and the postponement of anticipated renovations on its second floor, its seams were more than bursting.

The possibility of creating new space in the garage behind the main building seemed to answer the problem. So, the "Studio Garage," as it was immediately named, was quickly annexed, redecorated, and refurnished with play equipment just in time for the opening of school. As a handy recess area in all weather, when used as it now is on a regular schedule, it also allows a convenient separation between age groups and activities in an area small enough for any size of group to be easily supervised.

Organization, in fact, is an important part of the functioning of the Center. Since there is usually a ratio of about one child to every three or four teachers or assistants, much of the so-called organized time can be unguided, yet kept under control without continuous group planning.

The first period in the morning, from 8:45 to 9:30, for example, is a time when the children can do what they like—and there's plenty to choose from. A sand table and water table, all at a four-year-old's level, easels for crayoning and watercoloring, even tables for building such popular concoctions as noodle and paste designs are at hand, while an odd assortment of giant wire spools and soap drums provide things to hammer and paint outside . . . things to do together, or alone.

Then there is a second morning period for "art or science experience." Here, among familiar natural phenomena and a host of live animals including a rabbit, gerbils, and a hamster, the children can learn simple facts about nature, such as how and why water evaporates or crystallizes on the rabbit's dish. They can also cook anything they like from butter, pudding and cookies, to cranberry relish—themselves, on equipment built to exactly match their reach.

After this, they are again free to choose to play alone or participate in a group with structured activities or not, with no set program prescribed until the end of the morning.

Second-year students actually do all the planning for these activities. They are required to take physical science, and to have some experience with music, art, and children's literature, in addition to gaining a basic knowledge of child development and orientation in early childhood. Planning for these ages draws upon resources from an immense span of experiences, says Mrs. Cavanaugh, and, she adds, one experience of a certain type is never enough.

The Studio Garage, newly renovated to provide an annex for the Child Study Center has been colorfully painted and equipped as a play area. The inscription on the sign in front reads: "Y'all have fun now—hear! The Physical Plant Dept."

To make this phase of their learning more meaningful, she asks that child study majors who are teaching and assisting write down their experiences thus reviewing and assimilating them, in order to make the most of the learning opportunity they offer and to share them with others in the program. For the same reason this year she has started a seminar one afternoon per week where students can discuss the incidents and problems that have come up during the week, analyze them, focus on the important points in the situation, and pool their insights into these problems together.

The problems are often diverse, since there has been no attempt to keep the groups homogeneous at any age level. If there are children with special behavior problems of any kind, there is ample opportunity for them to have the attention they need and to find a means of expression to work out their difficulties.

Each year the Center tries, too, to include in the enrollment children who need help with special learning problems, including aphasics and those with other impeding disabilities. In recent years they have also almost always had several sets of twins adding another kind of variety to the group. They hope to continue to increase the number of children enrolled on scholarship at the Center each year as well.

Making both the teaching and learning experiences at the Center meaningful for children and student-teachers alike, as Mrs. Cavanaugh sees it, depends on providing as wide a breadth of experience in this necessarily brief exposure as is possible.

Also to establish a broad base of experience, Mrs. Sheppard tries to assure that the first year of observation experience for freshmen and the second-year teaching/assisting program take place on two distinct levels. In this way each student becomes involved with a full array of types of problems associated with different ages of children.

Consequently, Mrs. Cavanaugh and Mrs. Sheppard also agree that the experience offered in the Lasell program alone should not necessarily be counted as a full practice teaching situation, even in states which have relaxed their practice teaching requirements to accept other than public school experience in the face of the continuing shortage of teachers at the pre-school level.

The department also urges a wide exposure even for those students who have, early in their freshman year, already chosen a specialized area of education or age they wish to teach. There are increasing numbers of students, for example, coming into the program who have already had some experience during high school working with Head Start or handicapped children, many of whom know exactly which branch of special education they wish to pursue.

Just as the department advises students who want to work with fours to learn all they can about threes and fives—to know what you're building on and where you're going, which is valuable to any teacher, says Mrs. Cavanaugh—they urge these students, too, to become well acquainted with the normal child through their practice teaching experience as preparation for teaching children with specific problems later. Once you know what normal behavior is, they feel, you are better able to cope with and encourage abnormal children toward normal development.

As the Center grows, changes seem to suggest themselves and new directions emerge. For example, this year the presence of the new three-year-olds gave some of the troublesome and competitive fours someone to explain and show things to, so that there has been more sharing developing between groups than ever before.

Presently Mrs. Cavanaugh also plans to extend the interchange in seminars with student teachers this year to reach beyond to an improved communication in sessions with parents. Including student-teachers in these meetings could also provide better understanding of the ways in which some of these problems can be resolved with the cooperation of the child's family.

Meanwhile, cooperation with other members of the Lasell community continues to provide new vistas for the children, from tours of campus facilities and the recent Christmas activities planned for them in the library and at the student nurses' bazaar, to trips to Owen's Turkey Farm and the new Aquarium in Boston by Lasell bus.

Mrs. Cavanaugh hopes even more cooperation may develop with other departments on campus who can share and learn from working with this age group. Our very first concern is the children, she adds, and the great joy of being in Auburndale where many of these children live, is to see how some of them turn out later on, when nursery school is far behind.

NAHATIS TWINS IN DOUBLE JUMP

Falling from 2800 feet at 150 miles per hour is like floating, according to the Nahatis twins, Christina and Johanna ('71), and—it's fun. Their new-found sport of sky-diving, perhaps one of the most esoteric ever to claim so much enthusiasm so quickly, caught the interest of Boston Globe correspondent Evelyn Keene who decided to write a story about the twins. Her article, which follows, was published in the November 17, 1970 issue of the Globe. The photographs shown here were taken at Orange, Mass. during their first and second jumps.

The daredevil Nahatis twins look alike, think alike, and see eye-to-eye on just about everything, including their latest hobby of sky-diving.

Johanna and Christina Nahatis are identical twins. They live in Manchester and study retailing at Lasell Junior College in Newton.

In their spare time they are planning their next jump at the Orange Airport where they trained just about a year ago to parachute 2800 feet onto a sand pile target.

The twins are among the few girl parachutists and the only twins in the country to take up the sport. They like it so much they are trying to persuade their roommates at Lasell to try it.

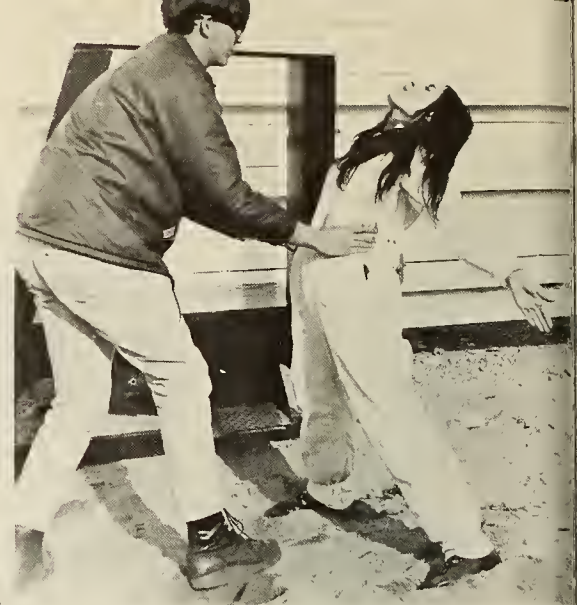

The 19-year-old twins (Johanna is just six minutes older than Christina) said more or less in unison, they like the "feel of the wind rushing at us, and the reassuring tap on the back from the instructor when he signals us to jump, but best of all, the sensation of floating alone through space when the nylon rip-cord is detached from the plane . . . the most fantastic trip of all."

Neither girl has any fear, but they haven't been able to convert their older brothers, 23 and 21, and a sister 22, to jumping. Although their parents, Christos and Alice Nahatis, apparently approve, Mr. Nahatis refuses to watch their dives.

The twins got the sky-diving bug from a couple in Manchester, Mr. and Mr. Condon McDonough, who have been on television shows that depict sky-diving. They decided about a year ago to take the instructions offered by Parachutes, Inc. at Orange Airport, about 100 miles from their home.

They made two jumps before the Thanksgiving weekend, and, providing the weather is good, plan soon to make a third. The first time they tried they admitted to "just a little fear," but the second time, "there is a feeling of excitement . . . you want to get out and feel the wind."

But like all sisters, they worry a little about each other. When one girl is floating through the air, she looks up to see her sister just exiting and they keep an eye on each other.

The sisters echo each other's sentiments on sky-diving and on every other conceivable subject. They are majoring in retailing at Lasell, but they have already applied to airlines to get stewardess jobs. Both want to travel, meet people and see the world, especially Greece, their favorite country and home of their ancestors.

To look at, they're a little hard to tell apart. Their long-long dark hair frames classic Grecian features. Johanna admits to weighing just a little more than Christina. And Christina says Johanna is brainier.

The girls are accomplished swimmers and tennis players and sing soprano. They have soft, lilting speaking voices and wide happy smiles.

During the Christmas season they'll be working in an exclusive downtown department store, as part of a work-study program and saving for their next jump. They've also done some modeling.

THE NATIONAL SCENE

■ New Options: It is time to change the "historic degree structure" of colleges and universities, says the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, and to introduce a whole new set of options for education beyond the high school. In a report that is sure to help stimulate the growing movement for academic reform, the commission has put its considerable prestige behind these ideas:

—Students are spending too much time in college. Requirements for the bachelor's degree could be cut from four years to three "without sacrificing educational quality," the commission says, while another year or two could be saved on the way to the Ph.D. and to medical practice.

—High school graduates should be given more opportunities to postpone or bypass formal college work, to "stop-out" from college for job experience, and to change directions in college.

—Much greater use should be made of two relatively new degrees: the Master of Philosophy, for those planning to teach in high schools, community colleges, and the lower division in colleges; and the Doctor of Arts, as the standard degree for "non-research" college teachers.

—The expansion of college-level tests and off-campus instruction can lead to college degrees earned without actual college residence.

Some colleges already are moving toward such reforms. In one effort, 17 institutions have received federal funds to create a "university without walls," in which student of various ages will be given wide flexibility for independent study and "self-direction."

The commission's proposals could have an important side benefit. If they were put into effect, it says, higher education could expect to save several billions of dollars a year by 1980.

■ Financial Woes: The extent of higher education's crisis in finance has been outlined in dramatic fashion by the Carnegie Commission. Based on a study of 41 colleges and universities of different types, the panel has concluded that about two-thirds of all

A Report on New Ideas for Higher Education

The following newspaper (Vol. 2, No. 4Q/December 1970) was prepared by the editors of the Chronicle of Higher Education for use in alumnae publications to keep college alumnae nationwide informed on the current issues and problems in higher education.

institutions today (1,540) are "in financial difficulty" or are headed in that direction. The situation is seen as the worst in history, amounting to what the study terms a "new depression."

For many institutions, the crisis has gone beyond mere "belt-tightening" and has led to cuts in important services. Clark Kerr, the commission's chairman, says the institutions' greatest need may be to restore public confidence.

■ Ph.D. Excess? By the end of this decade, some experts say, our graduate schools may be turning out at least twice as many doctorate-holders as they did in 1969. That might sound like something to cheer about, but educators are worried. They look at the drop in federal support for graduate study and wonder whether it isn't time the universities began holding back on new programs. A few private universities, in fact, already have announced plans to curtail graduate enrollments, and federal budget-makers are said to be thinking along similar lines.

"The watchword for the 1970's will no doubt be to limit and even reduce the number of doctoral programs," says a knowledgeable U.S. official, "and improve the quality of those that remain." Some educators, however, urge the universities to proceed cautiously at this point, lest they end up unable to satisfy the nation's need for highly educated professionals.

■ In Brief: Most institutions say they do not discriminate against women in administrative and faculty positions, reports the American Association of University Women. But a survey by the association finds that women seldom have major policymaking responsibilities or top-level positions on the faculty . . .

A hundred scholars from nine nations, including the U.S., have formed an International Committee on the University Emergency. Purpose: "To protect the rights of teachers and students to study together in peace and freedom" . . .

Projections of college enrollments point to worrisome trends for private institutions. One study suggests that the private-college share of enrollments may drop to only 15 per cent by 1985, compared with about 25 per cent now . . .

An association of 274 state colleges and universities has, in effect, withdrawn its endorsement of a code of principles on academic freedom and tenure. The group called for more stress on faculty responsibility and competence . . .

A committee of the National Collegiate Athletic Association has proposed that financial need be made the basis for athletic scholarships. Possible effects would be reduced expenses for athletic departments and a more even distribution of athletic talent among institutions . . .

The National Labor Relations Board, which conducts collective-bargaining elections and guards against unfair labor practices, has extended its jurisdiction to most private colleges.

WHO NEEDS WOMEN'S LIB?

The following excerpts were taken from an hour-long taped discussion which took place on December 1 when women's liberationist Linda Christian and six students were the luncheon guests of Dr. and Mrs. Greene at the President's house. The third guest to be invited to participate in a series of celebrity lunches being held for the first time this year, Mrs. Christian came as a representative of the 3-year-old National Organization for Women (NOW), the organization founded by Betty Friedan to help implement Title 7 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to include women, as a discriminated-against minority.

In talking about the activities of the eastern regional chapter of NOW, Mrs. Christian outlined each of the separate concerns of its different task forces, all of which, she said, are attempting to change the position of women in American society through legal and persuasive means. These include: evaluating the legal position of women—and by understanding what that situation is to attempt to change it, abortion and birth control, equal academic opportunities, women's position in organized religion, day care centers, and the image of women in the advertising media.

The six students participating in the discussion were: Ruth (Bunty) Field '71, Brockton, Mass.; Mary Bracken '71, New Canaan, Conn.; Louise Silverman '71, Lawrence, N.Y.; Linda Calve '71, Darien, Conn.; Louise Adler '71, Scarsdale, N.Y.; and Hinda Gottlieb '72, Oceanside, N.Y. Their separate comments have been keyed with dots in the following transcript. Mrs. Christian's remarks are prefaced by the initials LC.

Reporting on the following discussion for the Lasell News, Louise Adler '71 said, “. . . We came to the realization that Women's Liberation is Men's Liberation as well.”

● You made me think, when you were talking about how women are represented in the media, about newspaper ads where they advertise for gal fridays. They refer to women as gals or girls and yet they never refer to men as guys,—beyond the fact the jobs are so different.

LC: Well, at Harvard, it's always the Harvard men and the Radcliffe girls, and I think this shows as much as anything else the attitudes as to what young women are. You can be a fifty-year-old grandmother, and you'll still be referred to as a girl, especially if you're a secretary for man. Now a lot of women evidently seem to think this is very flattering . . . but the implications of this: that you are always an immature dependent no matter how old you are. . . . I think you have to think about it, and come to terms with it.

● A problem that I guess you'll have is that a lot of women like that. They like the idea of being dependent and not having to worry about where the next meal will come from, and I think maybe you will have to try to change that; to say, now don't be afraid, you can stand on your own two feet.

● I think we're going to have to start teaching that when children are 16 months old, because by the time they're three, they see a big difference between girls and boys, and it's not just a physical difference. They're treated different. Different things are expected of them. Different things are allowed. I wonder if it's possible to start changing attitudes of a woman 50 years old or even 30 years old. We really have to examine how these attitudes come on women—I think it's at least three years old.

LC: We have a very sexually regimented society, and it is obviously one that a lot of people have found pleasing for a number of years, but, on the other hand, the toll it has taken in terms of the life styles in this country, particularly those of educated women, has been quite amazing. Women have been educated at fine colleges and universities for well over 100 years and yet the actual positions that these women have been able to find in a non-volunteer way are strikingly low, and they usually have to go into what is considered a woman's field, if they go into a field.

● I regret it when I see a woman who has a fine education and then settles down and gets married and although she might want to go out and work, she is limited because she does have children—and her husband says, well you should stay home and bring up our family. She has this education, his may have been even less than hers, and yet he can go out to work and she has to stay in the house.

LC: What do you think about the type-casting of Freudian psychology. I think this is very interesting because you know the minute you start to discuss these things, you always run up against this . . . well dear, yes, you may want to go out and do things, but isn't that because you're neurotic? After all, haven't you read your Freud?

● Yes, but if you read your Freud, you also realize that all Freud could come up with at the end was "What do women want?" I mean that's not very smart.

LC: And it's very interesting. In his lectures on psychoanalysis he depicts the most unbelievable monster as the average woman. Her whole mature heterosexuality is based on envy and masochism. At the age of thirty, he says, most women are so rigidly formed psychologically that psychoanalysis can only relieve their suffering. It can never change them in any way because they have no more potentiality; the whole effort to change the object of their affection from their mother to their father has so sapped their vitality that they have no libido left and are rigidly cast in the role of a woman. They have no sense of social justice, he said, they are ruled by vanity, which, he said, is an attempt to hide their sexual deficiency, and modesty which is just a recognition of this fact. And, at the very end of the lecture he says . . . occasionally, however, we will see the human being under this exterior, and that's his end.

● For a very large segment of society it is true that women are more vain than men, but if you look at the reasons why, it's very interesting. If you don't look like what the ads depict as the ideal woman, then you're right there cutting yourself off from being appreciated or even being noticed by 48% of the population.

● But, you know, men have the same problem. They have to look a certain way; they have to act a certain way. So they're in the same rut we're in.

● Except in this society today, a man has more outlets, and that makes him less oppressed.

● No, no it doesn't. It makes him oppressed in a different way.

● I consider the outlets that a man has, and the careers that are available today extremely oppressing, but that's my personal philosophy. . . . But, a woman, in this same social structure, can't get anything except what she can get from men. I mean a woman can't have a job that can earn her enough money to live on by herself. She can do the same job a man does and receive $2000 a year less than he receives, so she has fewer outlets.

● A man can't live in the house if he wants to and take care of the children.

● I think there are very few men that want to do that.

LC: He CAN, if he's willing to put up with the opprobrium that society will push on him for doing this, just as a woman is free to go out and have a career provided she is willing to put up with the guff that she will have to for having a life style that is somewhat different from that of her neighbors.

The whole question of how does one combine having children and family life and a career is really the one that I think comes to the heart of the whole question, because I think mature adults of either sex desire the intimacy of marriage and the joy of children. . . . In the case of women this decision is supposed to limit her almost totally to the care of these children, although in fact a lot of women who do not hold jobs can spend a tremendous amount of time away from the home either in shopping or bridge playing or volunteer activities, but they are supposedly contributing—whereas a woman who will maybe spend the same amount of time or possibly even less in a job is continually asked, "We why do you want to take a job, don't you have a job right there at home?" And I think women are in many cases unjustly saddled with guilt for spending the amount of time they do away from home, just because it could result at the end of the week in a pay check—albeit very small in most cases.

● But even though some women can get out of the home and have a job or do volunteer work, it is because they have the means to hire another woman to come in and take their place. So they are not really becoming liberated in any way; their liberation depends on the oppression of another woman . . . continuing the oppression.

LC: Well, this is continually said, however; there are women who tremendously enjoy taking care of children, and I think that society needs these women. The fact that I also enjoy working, of course, does not mean that I don't enjoy taking care of my children too. But when I'm away from my children, I want someone taking care of them that enjoys it, and if she wants to do this as a full-time job, why does this imply that you are oppressing her? . . . just as I don't think she who opts voluntarily, freely, to stay home and take care of her own children, is being oppressed. I'm talking now about the kind of woman who did want or does want to do something in addition to taking care of those children, and it's because of social pressures, or other pressures from her husband, that she is not able to do this in addition. Now she is oppressed. . . .

● I think that's slightly distorting it though. I mean the point I was making is that it's always a woman, it's never or seldom another man. Why is there this distinction between men and women? If we were all raised equally, with the same human values and sensitivities, I think there would be just as many men who would want to take care of children as their life work as there would be women.

LC: Well, there are men who are child psychologists. Look at someone like Jerome Bruner, or someone on television like Mr. Rogers who obviously enjoys children more than he enjoys anything else. Well, they can do it.

● Yes, but that's very different from going into someone's home for $25 a week and taking care of their children.

LC: But not all women who do this necessarily earn $25 a week either. I do think that there should be a dignity attached to taking care of children. . . . and I think that once the job of taking care of children does have its full dignity, then perhaps you will see more men doing it.

● That's what I'm studying for now, and I want to work with kids. I'll probably go into nursery school and elementary education, and I don't think I'll feel oppressed. I think it's a great joy, kids; but when I do get married I will probably go out and work with other children and put my child into a nursery or day care center because I want to be able to work—to differentiate between the two—then I'll have something.

LC: You also can bring something back to the children if you're outside of the home all day. . . . I can come back to my children with a much greater sense of ease and comfort and joy when I have been spending some hours outside the home doing what I want to do than if I have to continually spend my day responding to them. . . . As adults human beings need many stimuli to continue to develop and grow, and I think this is as true of the mother as it is of the father.

● Well, what I think Bunty was saying was that having a woman as a babysitter is reinforcing the whole idea that a woman's place is taking care of a child. And that's why you don't have a society where taking care of a child is a respected thing, because it's women's work and women are not respected. Anything a woman does is fairly trivial. It has to do with emotions. I think one of the reasons there are so few men in grade school and practically none in pre-school education is because it's looked on as woman's work. The smaller a child is, which may come down to the more it babbles, the less coherently it speaks and stimulates an adult, the less important it is, and therefore the more important it is for that child to be with a woman instead of a man.

LC: But actually one can, I think, respond more creatively to childish babbles if one has other things that interest one. I couldn't spend all my life just studying renaissance literature, and I would feel the same way about spending all my life worrying about children and their diapers. I think people who are solely one thing, for example the man who spends 18 hours a day being a doctor, is a very dull man. Because of society he is only able to do this one particular thing, and I think you need the richness of a personal life as well as a career no matter what sex you are.

● I'm just afraid that a three-year-old kid is so pure, it's just like a little monkey, he picks up everything, because he's really got nothing; he's just got about 3 years behind him. . . . And then he sees a woman come in, and be his nursery school teacher. Something happens. Something conditions you into thinking women should be nursery school teachers . . . and women should be babysitters.

LC: Well I don't know. I know men who have been very successful kindergarten teachers . . . and a lot of men now are becoming far more interested in this whole business of not studying children in labs but actually going out and doing something for them in elementary education.

● I agree but it's hard for them because that's one of the lowest salaried jobs,

LC: That's true but you know what's going to happen. When men take over kindergarten jobs, if you get enough men interested in it, all of a sudden it's going to be too important for women to do. . . . There was just an article in the New York Times Magazine about how much smarter children are than you think . . . you know what the ramifications are going to be. If they are smart, they shouldn't just be home with mommy. There should be some man out there. Either that or mommy will be told she can't of course do anything outside of the home; she's going to have to be putting on continual light and sound films for these children in order to stimulate them. . . . It can go both ways but either way, it's going to work to the detriment of women. If the children are decided to be too smart for their mothers, then men will have to bring them up; if it's decided that children are so smart that women will have to spend all this time with them, then mothers will have to be educated to be good mothers and they'll have to spend every blessed minute stimulating their children so they'll get into Harvard when they're 10 years old.

● But as it stands now it's oppressing women and it's oppressing men. I've taught nursery school, and I've learned a lot about living by watching life and by watching life beginning. And I think about a lot of things that men don't think about and haven't learned to think about simply because they haven't been exposed to them—and that I see as one of their greatest oppressions. I'm interested in women's liberation because I'm a woman; I'm interested overall in human liberation. My particular segment of it is Women's Liberation, because that's my biology.

LC: I think we can use the term oppression almost too casually. I think you can say that men are oppressed because they don't have the contact with the children that we think they ought to have. But I also think that even beyond the terms of oppression, one has to think about what it is doing to our whole culture to have the care of the young completely in the hands of one sex, and then, as the child gets older, have it almost totally given over to the other sex—whether that child is a girl who'll then grow up to marry a man and then bring up his family, or whether she's going to go to a school where the teachers are male. In other words this is the pattern, and I think if we had more integration at all levels, if you had more women in colleges, more men in elementary education, the total enrichment of not only this new generation also of us as adults would be far greater.

I think it's very hard for a man to go out and earn his daily bread and come back and talk with his wife who's been at home all day. The two of them live in totally different universes. They have these children that they've brought into the world as their one point of common interest. . . . but they don't really see these children in the same way at all. I think that one of the great things that's happening among students who are maybe ten years younger than I am is that there is this tremendous concern when people get married that they are not going to let the other one be either solely responsible or solely burdened with one aspect of life or the other. . . . Also there's this other aspect of it which started with no idea of women's liberation at all. It came out of a totally different tradition, but it has ramifications for women's lib. That is this whole idea of natural childbirth and the father being with the mother in labor and delivery; having the parents together, not just at the moment of conception but also when that child is born, and this becomes a tremendous experience for both of them. . . .

In our society we're separated for all the major events of life. The only time we invite people in is when we get married. Then society is there. But when you're born you're alone, and when you die, you're often alone. Death is relegated to the hospital and birth is relegated to the hospital, and these are the two foci of life, as far as I can see it. Whenever people need other people the most, they say well now's the time for you to be alone.

I don't know that you can really tie this in in any way to the total women's liberation movement, but I do think when you start talking about women's liberation, you come back to the point that we don't want to be alone anymore. Why should we be alone in the house with our children all day? Why should we be alone when we have that child? Why can't we have the companionship that we honestly thought we were getting when we decided to get married. I don't think that too many women when they get married think of their married life as being a lonely one. They think: yesterday I was alone, now I will be part of a group, but after the honeymoon is over the man leaves the house, and oftentimes, if he is a successful man, you barely ever will see him again until his retirement. . . . If he's gotten used to being in the house a little bit more, maybe even his retirement won't be such a shattering thing as it is for so many men. . . .

● I think that the natural childbirth and the Lemans method all tie in very closely with women's liberation, because for one thing, one of the reasons that abortion isn't a personal choice for a woman is that women aren't making the laws—men are. And one of the reasons I think men are making laws like: there should be no abortion, and only married women can have birth control, is that they're not at all involved in pregnancy or childbirth. They can feel disassociated from a woman's pregnancy. They can know intellectually that they made this woman pregnant, and yet it's no part of them because they aren't at all involved. If they go to classes while a woman is pregnant,—they find out in these classes what's happening and what they can do all through the pregnancy, and at the moment of birth and the man is involved too. He comes to feel almost pregnant. You can tell that if you've seen a father who hasn't been at all involved in his wife's pregnancy or his child's birth and compare him with a man who has been. They're just two extremely different human beings.

● But you can't forget, today we live in a different time. It's just beginning now that you can go into the operating room. Society before said no. My father never had the joy of seeing my brother or myself born. And you can't condemn them either. You have to say, well I understand but let's change it. You know I find that too many people say; you're wrong, and it's very difficult for someone to say, you're right, I'm wrong. If you say I understand but let's change, you've got a far better thing going for you.

LC: Well, we have a society, as all societies are and will always be, that has been somewhere and is going somewhere else. You never can stop the train and say now let's everybody get off and put on a new, different carload and start for a new destination. We've got people of every age and culture and background in this society and we alone can't lead them or take them. All we can do in the last analysis is to express our ideas, hope somebody is listening, and hope that at least in our own personal lives and the lives of those we're most intimately associated with that something better can emerge than what we've seen emerge in the past. . . . Which is not to say that everything that's gone on before, or everything that's going on now, is wrong. I think, as all people who want to change things hope, things can be improved.

● I think we get too caught up in the idea of wrong and blame anyway. Because the situation is wrong, that means—if there are two people in that situation—one of them has to be the one that activated that wrong. I mean—that's absurd. I don't think there's any point in finding out who was the one that did it, that made it wrong, what is the point in that? It's totally self-defeating. It's not at all constructive. The point is to find out what is wrong, analyze why it's wrong, how it can be changed, and then go ahead and change it.

LC: And start with the very youngest in your society. I think this is where any kind of a new idea is going to have to start. When you have daughters, when you have sons—and it isn't just your daughters, your sons too have to be talked to—these things have to be explained to them.

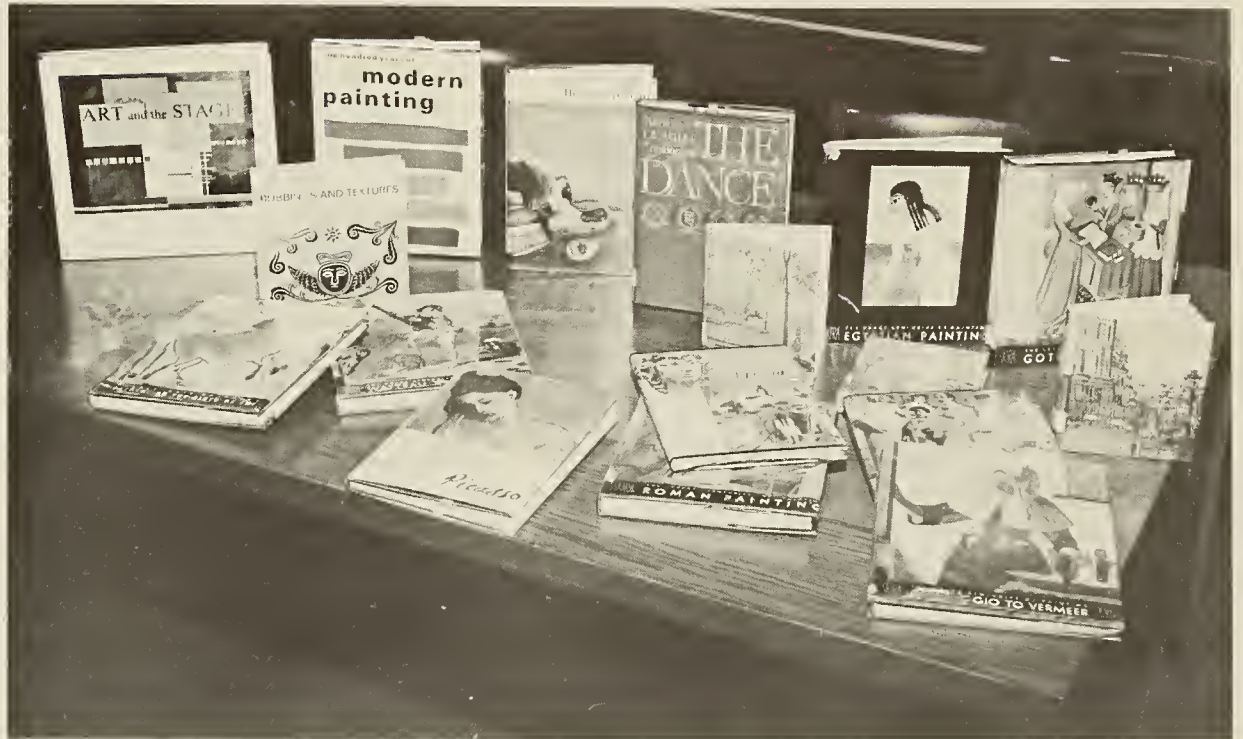

● The sensitive male, you know that man you find who can take everything and never cry, I think that has to change too. You know a man can cry and a man can feel, and we have to respect that fact.

LC: And he's a better man for it.

● Of course. He really is, I agree.

Mid Cary Hill writes from Belgrade Lakes, Maine: "11/19/70. My only news is that Virginia Moore Starkey '17 visited us here in June, and we had a little reunion with Lydia Adams Godsoe and husband and Barbara McLellan McCormick and husband. It had been 52 years since Gin had seen Lydia and Barbara—so it was quite a gab-fest!

"A letter from Grace Tredway Davies says that she is still very happy in her surroundings at the Kappa Alpha Theta House, Delaware, Ohio, where she is a housemother. She hears from Marj Kunkel Brown regularly. Helen Smith Stone has just returned from visiting her daughter in Indiana. Harriet Fera French and her husband had a marvelous trip to Hong Kong this fall. Ted and I started out to drive to Texas, but en route decided to fly to Rio de Janeiro—a beautiful city. We took a side trip to Brasilia—a most unusual and interesting new capital.

"A real thrill for this old grandmother was when I was invited to sit in the pilot's seat on the big Air Force C-141 cargo plane as we flew over the Amazon at sunset. That I shall never forget!"

Peg Houser Hamlin's recent postcard, mailed in Darjeeling, India, brought word that she planned to spend the Thanksgiving holidays with her son David and family in Wilmington. The 1970 fall vacation trip included Thailand, Singapore, Penang, Bali, Borneo and Kashmir.

The Class extends sincere sympathy to Helen Moss Post, whose husband died very suddenly in November, 1970.

The 45th Reunion of the Class of 1925 was celebrated on June 13th with a dinner in the "Sirloin and Saddle" dining room of the Marriott Motor Hotel in Auburndale. This handsome establishment is built on the site of the old Totem Pole Ballroom at Norumbega Park. Perhaps some will remember it! Those present were: Estelle L. Jenney, Helen P. McNab (Mrs. Howard Willand); Barbara Cushing (Mrs. George A. Jenkins); Dorothy Hagadorn (Mrs. Everett Taylor); Gertrude Kendall (Mrs. Henry Lund); Marion Rice (Mrs. Alf Severson); Madelyn B. Stover (Mrs. Joseph McGarry); Alice Wilkins (Mrs. John Moses) and Martha Wilcox (Mrs. Horace Hills). There were glowing reports of the "Gab Fest" held during the Saturday afternoon reception at the new Library.

Do you remember the song—to the tune of "Hello Dolly"—composed for our 40th Reunion by Barbara Jenkins? Well, Barbara did it again! To the tune of "April Love" Barbara put some beautiful words, for which we shall all be very proud. We are fortunate to have one of our members so willing to share her talents.

Personally, I regret very much not being able to attend Reunion, but Henry and I had planned this year to visit the Scandinavian countries. We spent six wonderful weeks travelling, via rented car, throughout Denmark, Sweden and Norway. In Sweden I renewed acquaintance with 22 cousins, visited Henry's birthplace and the birthplaces of his mother and father and my mother and father.

Unfortunately, many classmates were unable to come to Auburndale for Reunion, but we have received some very wonderful letters, portions of which I share with "you all":

Blanche D. Avery: This is my last year of teaching in Poughkeepsie. Perhaps I will be able to make the next Reunion. So far our school program plus transportation difficulties have made it out of the question.

Patty Berkson Hoover: The slogan of our present life is "you only live Twice". We are enjoying a happy and full life, combined families of four children and four grandchildren. I have retired from my Chatham College teaching; Jack, from his Goodrich Chemical Company. I am still very active in my music life—much performing. We enjoy the small town life (Hudson, Ohio), with proximity to both Cleveland and Pittsburgh and our families.

Jessie Matteson Ray: Everything is well with me and mine. My son, Tom, a Captain in the Air Force, has just left for a two-year stint in Formosa. My daughter and two children have been visiting for the past two weeks. In less than a month I am off to England—to live for ten days in one of the oldest colleges at Oxford while attending an International Seminar on European-Atlantic Unity. From there I go to Moscow to join an "International Delegation of American Women for International Understanding". This should prove most interesting—with briefings by our State Department and the co-operation of the Soviet Embassy. We shall continue on to Yugoslavia and Rumania. I do hope to see you all again at a later Reunion.

Lois Bryant Warner: Our former Class Secretary sends this word: "Sorry the 1925 Class News has waned the past year, but hope the Reunion will bring forth many letters. Our days at Lasell seem to bring back (to me) a beautiful, clean, wholesome episode, which helps me to try to 'accept' today's dreary world. I feel sorry for the women who want to be liberalized and given the same opportunities as men. Perhaps my thinking is not practical or progressive, but I really believe that the female role is to try to help improve each generation spiritually, intellectually and culturally. Am truly sorry I shall not be joining you at Reunion."

Emma Smith Quereau: Retired from nursing after 40 years. Husband, formerly employed by the U.S. Government, National Bureau of Standards, Boulder, Colo., is also retired. Daughter Nancy is a registered nurse on the staff of Whidbey Naval Hospital, Oak Harbor, Wash. Daughter Sally Graham's lieutenant-husband is stationed at Whidbey Navy Base; grandson, Gregory Marc Graham, was born 4/8/70. Happiness is having old friends and new pull the latch string to be welcomed by us or Sandy, the friendly dog, or Miss Sambo, our docile cat. Our beds are much more comfortable than those at the motels; the coffee pot is always on! Do come to Boulder!

Alberta Wight Wilson: Husband, Harry McKay Wilson, M.D. Children, Barbara Wilson Beck (Lasell '54) and Harry McKay Wilson, 2nd.

Mary Saunders Houston: Husband, George, recently made a full Professor, Chairman of the Department of Business in Department of Continuing Education, Northeastern University. My daughter, an accredited Religious Education Director, Unitarian-Universalist Church, St. Petersburg, Fla., graduate of Vassar, Phi Beta Kappa, now in process of acquiring her M.A. at the University of South Florida. Our granddaughter, Karen Fenderson, 14, enters high school in September '70.

Dorothy Cook Hagen: Husband, Arthur C.; son, Lawrence S. Reynal; present occupation, housewife and traveler.

Dorothy Keeler Stewart: Husband, William Henry Stewart, and I are both retired after he suffered a heart attack. We have moved to New Harbor, Maine; keep busy with gardening and restoring furniture; I always have handiwork projects. My sister-in-law, Mary Stewart Kominda (whom you may remember as an Art instructor at Lasell) lives next door. Sorry not to be with you all in June—this will be the first Reunion I have missed.

Christine Chamberlin Kenney: Had hoped to make a trip East, but we are in the process of selling our San Rafael, Calif. home; feel we better sit tight until this "project" is over.

Claire Stritzinger Daller: Have taught school since 1948 when my husband died; shall retire this June. Still live in my old home in Norristown, Penna., but am not sure what my future plans will be. My daughter lives in Westport, Conn., frequently drive there to visit my two grandsons and granddaughter. My married son, member of a Philadelphia law firm, lives in North Wales, Penna.

Ruth A. Buffington: Still very much interested in my painting. Will be in London for a time this summer; then on to Southern France, headquarters in Nice; some time in Paris before returning to the West Coast late in September. A covey of quail is coming down the walk as I sit in my Studio, so you can see the Carmel Highlands (Calif.) is still country. Sorry I will not be able to be with you at the Reunion.

Ethel Clow Black: Own and operate, with husband, Black's Paper Store and Gift Shop in Wolfeboro, N.H. Have two daughters, one married and living in South Weymouth with seven children. The other, Mary Dye, is Associate Professor Psychiatric Nursing at Yale School of Nursing and Clinical Specialist at the Connecticut Mental Health Rehabilitation Center. She will have her Ph.D. at the end of this year. Had my 40th Reunion from Massachusetts General Hospital three years ago, so know how much fun you will have. Shall be thinking of you all.

Ruth Shepard Parmenter: Three daughters, Janet, a 1956 Lasell graduate, is now Mrs. George W. Ellinwood, Jr. and lives in Wilton, Conn.; Martha lives in Harrison, N.Y.; and Linda, Lasell '64, now teaches in Stuttgart, Germany. Sorry to miss Reunion—my husband and I leave for Europe on May 22nd; return in late June.

Catherine Beecher Wood: Husband, John LeRoy Wood, M.D.; Children, Robert Beecher Wood, Carolyn Wood Brox (Lasell '59) and Eleanor Wood Litka. Am very involved in church and community activities. LeRoy is able to get away a little more so we are enjoying vacation trips in this country; last fall visited England, Italy, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Holland and France. Our son's wife is a Lasell girl—the former Ann Douglass '59.

Margaret Gordon Ferguson: Husband, C. Stewart Ferguson (deceased); children, Cynthia Campbell and Nancy Chapman. Would like to say that I am coming to Reunion, but June is a very full month for me. Just can't believe this is our 45th,—except for the white hairs and the fact that I tire more easily, I feel no older than when I was a Nut at Lasell. Nancy returned to Lasell for her Tenth Reunion last year; reported the many changes on campus.

Eleanor Steele: Sorry not to join you for our 45th, but anyone who is "retired" knows that word is synonymous with "busy"! In a small town a new-comer is grabbed up for every job that comes along—they are all fun but time-consuming. Leave on May 10th for a vacation trip through Canadian Rockies and a boat trip to Alaska.

Mary Edna Hart Hoyt: Husband, Walter Kenneth Hoyt; daughter, Nancy Burnett, associate professor, San Jose College; two grandchildren. How good it would be to attend Reunion and talk to all '25-ers. Because of health problems, it will be impossible for me to travel, but my love and best wishes will be with you all for a gay get-together.

Martha Fish Holmes: Husband, Edgar Miller Holmes, M.D.; children, Edgar Miller Holmes, Stephen Vincent Holmes, Ann Elizabeth Flatt. Son Edgar will finish his long years of training in Orthopedic Surgery on July 1st; will open his office in Rutland, Vt. in the fall. He has a lovely wife and baby boy, Todd. Steve is an assistant director of Y.M.C.A. Camp in Keene, N.H., where he lives with his wife, Joan, and three children. Ann married a Swiss boy who is a biochemist and presently teaching and doing research at M.I.T. She spent four years in Switzerland, but is now only five miles away in Wellesley. She has two little girls. Please give my love to all '25-ers. Am sorry not to be with you.

I think it was wonderful so many returned the Reunion Information Blank and with additional, detailed news. How about the rest of you girls? We'd love to hear from you; we shall include the information in a later issue of the LEAVES.

From the Robert L. Reeves (Harriet Colwell): "Merry, Merry Christmas—and we sincerely hope that good health and much happiness have been with you throughout the year!

"At this time last Christmas, all of the Reeves were preparing for Nancy's ('66) and Gary's wedding—a lovely affair! AND, as always (it seems), 1970 has continued to be a busy and eventful year for all of our 'Clan'.

"Alice (Lasell '66) set the pace early—with a ten day trip to Honolulu and Maui in February. Needless to say—she had one of her best times ever! Then a business trip to Europe for RLR in March—Switzerland, England and France. Spring vacation—Harriet and Katy off to Lexington, Ky. for a visit with daughter, Ann (Reeves Schmid '58), Lindsey and Robert. RLR to Switzerland and England again in April for a week.

"Nancy finished her second year of teaching in June—and Gary completed his residency at City Hospital. Shortly after, they were off to Fort McClelland in Anniston, Ala., where (hopefully) Nancy and the new Doctor-Captain will be stationed for the two-year period required. Nostalgically, this is where RLR completed his six weeks of ROTC training a "few" years ago—after his Junior year in college.

"Alice, as vivacious as ever—and serious about her retailing career with O'Neil's (of the May Company chain) here in Akron. Now an assistant buyer after her first year and doing a fine job! She and Barb Ake have a new, lovely apartment, Gloucister Court.

"In October, RLR off again for the third trip to Europe—this time to Switzerland, Italy, Germany and France—and Harriet to Fort Lauderdale, Fla. for a short visit with her sister Marge and Jack Godfrey.

"Harriet, continually busy all year with her Hospital Board group and the many 'affairs' of four daughters and two sons-in-law!

"A wonderful 'surprise party' given by all our girls (John and Gary) on our 25th Anniversary, July 14 (Bastille Day). Attended by many close and long-standing intown friends—just great!

"So now you know what's been 'going on' with the Reeves. All the girls, the boys, Gary and John, and the 'little people', Lindsey and Robert, will be here for Christmas or the day after.

"Yes, we have much to be thankful for—and we wish much happiness for you and your loved ones during Christmas and the Holiday Season. Our best wishes also throughout the New Year!"

To: Lasell LEAVES

I just thought it's been entirely too long since I wrote my news and gave my current address, so here I am.

Walt (who is in real estate development) and I have been living in St. Croix, Virgin Islands for almost four years. Our children, Brian (6) and Michelle (5) live a wonderful outdoor life in our all-year climate. I have a part time secretarial job mornings. We love it here as long as we can get off "the rock" frequently and island hop or get to the States.

I was happy to see my Lasell roommate, Debby Hestwood, in New York City in August. She has a good job in the fashion department of J. Walter Thompson. Debby looks just great.

Our address: Star Rt. 00864, Pelican Cove, Christiansted, St. Croix, V.I. 00820.

A LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT

It may surprise you to hear it, but there is one service you can perform for Lasell that is almost more important than giving money.

Notice that I said "almost". I don't want to give anyone the idea I am discouraging contributions.

At least equally appreciated, however, is alumnae help in recruiting promising students. Lasell's reputation in the past, I know, has always been based on the high caliber of our student body; we want to keep it that way. But we are moving into an era of much sharper competition among colleges for the good students, and you can be of genuine service in helping us maintain our standards.

For example, how many girls from your area are currently applying to Lasell? Do you know who they are or anything about them? Would you be willing to help our Admissions Office screen the list—if there is a list—and suggest likely candidates of your own?

Perhaps 80 percent of current Lasell applications come from the Northeast: New England plus New York and New Jersey. Both Miss Marie Kaden, our Director of Admissions, and Mrs. Karen Ferris, our Assistant Director, maintain rigorous schedules just covering this area. We want girls from the Northeast, but we also want girls from the South and Midwest and Far West. It is going to take alumnae help to interest new students who live outside the effective range of our Admissions Officers, not only all over this country, but in fact all around the world.

In that connection, it may interest you to know that, in recent years, more and more foreign students are coming to Lasell. We applaud this trend. Foreign students automatically contribute to the general educational process almost as much as they receive; we would like to have many more of them.

In a few cities, Lasell graduates have already been of immense help to us in our recruitment process. Perhaps I can recommend some of their methods to all of you.

1. There is a return card bound into this issue of The Leaves. If you have any names of prospective students to suggest, either for September 1971, or September 1972, we would be glad to get them.

2. On receipt of your card, our Admissions Office will write a warm, friendly note to the girl(s) in question, giving her some basic information about the College and telling her that you have suggested she might be interested. A copy of this letter will go to you.

3. It would then be up to you to decide if you wish to pursue it further locally. You might write her a note yourself, or give her a call asking if there is any information you can supply. If you know of more than one student thinking about Lasell, you might make sure they know each other.

4. A few alumnae have felt challenged by the recruitment possibilities, and we have set up a continuing relationship. We would like to see the list grow longer. Would you be interested? This might involve receiving from us names of other applicants from your area that have come in independently, and asking you to serve as our local representative, making sure they have all the information they need about Lasell, and providing a friendly, neighborhood contact.

5. Other activities are also possible, though some are best arranged through a Lasell Club or group. You might invite all prospective applicants to someone's home one evening for a get-acquainted session. It is even possible that a current Lasell student, or a member of the faculty could come down and talk to the group, bring pictures, slides or other information. You can doubtless think of other variations yourself.

What kind of girl to recommend? This is a hard question to answer. The highly motivated, well organized high school leaders are obvious suggestions, of course; girls in this category are sought by every college—we would be glad to have them.

Beyond that, what we are looking for is the girl with potential. She may not yet have distinguished herself, either academically or socially. She may not know yet what she is good at, or even what she wants to do. Yet you sense the potential is there. If you feel she would benefit from the small college atmosphere, the personal supervision, and genuine faculty interest that has always been the hallmark of a Lasell education, we would urge you to send in her name.

The Leaves will be printing additional insert-reply cards from time to time; we regard this as a program for the long pull. Please don't get discouraged. It is frustrating, I know, to recommend someone, and do all the work of follow-through, then have her change her mind at the last minute, or—even worse—be turned down by Lasell. But please keep your suggestions coming. If we can mobilize all ten thousand of our present alumnae into a continual channel of recruitment, and recommendation, Lasell's place will be secure in the front rank of junior colleges.

ALUMNAE COUNCIL 1971

April 2-3-4 were the dates, the campus was the place, and alumnae were the featured guests at the Annual Alumnae Council sessions in which delegates dispatched the business of Lasell Alumnae, Inc., gained some insights into alumnae career patterns and college affairs, and honored three outstanding alumnae with Medallions for their distinguished careers since graduation.

The weekend began with a reacquaintance social hour at the home of President and Mrs. Greene and a buffet dinner in Woodland Hall. Special guest speaker at the dinner, Mrs. Elaine Cavanaugh, Director of the Child Study Center, described some of the activities of the center through a color slide presentation and commentary illustrating the programs that were carried out at the Rockwell facilities during the past year. Alumnae reconvened for a Saturday morning session devoted to a full agenda of business matters. Approval was given to an amended version of the constitution prepared by the by-laws committee, treasurer's, auditor's and scholarship committee's reports were accepted, and new officers of Lasell Alumnae, Inc. for the year 1971-72 introduced.

While the voices of women's liberationists continue their outcry against the inequality of opportunity for women, and their subsequent frustrations in seeking meaningful careers, the career panel of alumnae returning to talk about their respective involvements offered a note of compensating optimism of a sort. Certainly they presented, with refreshing candor, four positive avenues for achievement which, in keeping with the spirit of the seventies, were in the service of others. The following account of the challenges and rewards found in each of their chosen professions may reflect at least in part some of the obvious sense of fulfillment each expressed in describing these commitments.

Barbara Moulton '63

[The youngest of three daughters of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Moulton, Larchmont, N.Y., all of whom attended Lasell (Shirley Moulton DeVore '50 and Carol Moulton Hokanson '54), Barbara joined the Hartford National Bank and Trust Company on graduation as a clerk typist. Today she is one of four personnel assistants for the company, which, as the largest bank in Connecticut, has 2500 employees.]

Opening the panel with a description of what is involved in performing all the personnel functions for 2500 employees, Barbara explained that finding qualified applicants is really only a small part of her job. Since the staff is relatively small, the responsibilities are quite varied and to describe them one would have to choose not a typical day in the office, but a typical year in which all of these projects would work through their various stages of development.

But basically a job description would have to include: counseling employees; gaining information for salary reviews; recruiting at colleges; handling newspaper advertising, business details, employment agencies; conducting orientation sessions; and finally, the screening and hiring of applicants.

Dealing with all of these aspects of the basic function makes it unstructured work, and working with an enormous variety of people, makes each situation in a sense unique. You have to enjoy both of these conditions to enjoy the work, she explained. The people to be interviewed, too, provide a variety of problems and situations to cope with. While some are looking for their first jobs, some are trained and experienced; some are technically skilled workers, others are office personnel. In short, she said, each of these situations requires of the personnel interviewer a whole set of personal and professional attributes that must be applied to making on-the-spot decisions.

As the company representative in these interviews, the interviewer's job is really to assume responsibility for making independent decisions that translate company policy to fit the situation at hand. Whatever you decide, you must stick with it, and this, she added, is what makes it so interesting. You learn a great deal about people, and you learn to cope with almost any kind of question that may be thrown to you.

And, not only is it educational and challenging, but the satisfactions are many—especially for a woman, since it is a field where there is no discrimination against women. A woman in personnel is paid well, she makes just as much as her male counterpart, is just as involved as he in all phases of the work.

The final and most important satisfaction, she concluded is feeling that you are really reaching and helping people. There is the inevitable human failure that comes in dealing with people, "the feeling of not reaching enough, not helping enough, but when you can, it is extremely rewarding."

Marcia Madden '62

for her degree in Occupational Therapy in 1966. Since then she has been affiliated with: the District of Columbia General Hospital, the Memminger Foundation, Topeka; and the Lemuel Shattuck Hospital, Boston. Presently she is a member of the Executive Board of the Massachusetts Association for Occupational Therapy and is head therapist at the Dr. Harry Solomon Mental Health Center in Lowell. Her mother, Priscilla Parmenter Madden '37 is a past president of Lasell Alumnae, Inc., a member of the Corporation, and former member of the Board of Management.]

To clear away any lingering wisps of an image of some "leather bag" occupational therapist, Marcia began by describing the training required to enter the profession. First, she explained, it is a five-year program of medically-oriented courses. Biology, zoology, anatomy, neurology, and neuroanatomy are required, and her own curriculum contained an additional minor in psychology with emphasis on the behavioral sciences. There are activity-oriented courses too, maybe designed to develop a craft or work skill, to help the student learn to evaluate a patient's prevocational skills.

Basically there are two areas of occupational therapy: working with physical disabilities, where the aim is to help the individual attain the highest level of functioning he can. Here training is directed to improve muscle strength, range of motion, and performance of basic life tasks, such as dressing, eating, etc. The second, mental health, is the area of her particular interest.

In mental health the basic definition of purpose is that essentially you are concerned with action, or with the doing processes—in creating increased skills that will yield a certain satisfaction and sense of creative self-fulfillment and social balance in the patient. Presently she is involved in three major area of mental health therapy:

First, she does activities programming—developing recreational or craft programs and overseeing them to be sure they do in fact provide a basis for new social skills and self-development.

Second, she is part of a mental health team that makes home visits to out-patients, or people referred by the community. In this area especially, she says, she tries to emphasize what people can do, rather than what they can't. Utilizing the limited time she has to help them perform more realistically, she tries to help them make decisions where they may not realize there is a choice of action, to find alternatives, and in this way to go beyond their anxiety to seek and find solutions to their problem.

Third, she described her work with a task-oriented group set up as part of a model cities program to effect change. Again, she explained, the problem was one of getting through the feelings of the members of the group and providing them with the means to find alternative action, and to feel in creating change that they were really affecting their environment.

In other areas of rehabilitation her work includes visits to youths in jail, helping them develop problem-solving tools that will give them a way to decide what they'll do next, and running a communications center for the parents of juveniles now in half-way houses. One way they've found to bring parents and these youths into a closer understanding, she said, has been to involve parents separately in the same simulated problem-solving projects used to help their children develop alternatives. Later they are brought together to confront the same problem set simultaneously.

Her work in the area of drug rehabilitation has taken the form of consulting with SHARE in Lowell, planning drop-in centers for the seven surrounding areas, countering by involving children in craft projects at the playgrounds where drugs are being obtained. Coping with the drug scene in a slightly different way too, she is acting as a consultant helping to set up a therapeutic drug community, which, while run for and by residents, does utilize "involved" consultants.

The work is enjoyable, Marcia added, because you are helping people to use their strengths. "The work you are doing with people is in a sense preventative, and it's very exciting—you yourself are always developing new skills in working with people."

Nan Sparks Hunter '61

[The mother of four, and active in a number of local organizations to help children of all ages, Nan has served as co-ordinator for the Fresh Air Fund in this part of Massachusetts for the last seven years. This year she was selected by the Outstanding Young Women of America Program from 6,000 nominations of young women between 21 and 35 to appear in the 1970 listing which is designated to recognize those who contribute to the betterment of their communities, professions and country. Currently she is involved in work for the Fresh Air Fund and Families for Inter-racial Adoption. Among her many recent interests have been: teaching nursery school in Framingham, and substitute teaching in special classes for retarded children in the Nixon School in Sudbury. She is majoring in Kindergarten education at Framingham State College and is presently serving as a Director of Lasell Alumnae, Inc.]

Speaking first about her activities with the Fresh Air Fund Nan supplied some background information about the organization which goes back to its establishment by a minister in the poor section of New York City in 1877. Admitting 4–5 children from these areas in its first year, it was designed so that they might experience a summer in a family situation out of the city. The program steadily grew, with the help of its then sponsoring agent the New York Herald Tribune, until this year more than 15,500 children between the ages of five and twelve visited 2,500 communities scattered through twelve states from Virginia to Maine.

In her role as area chairman for the fund during the last seven years, she has helped the program to increase the number of children in the Framingham area alone from 19 to 90. Most of her time is spent matching host-families with visiting children. Each spring she conducts group sessions for prospective families, and on arrival day she joins each of the host families to welcome their two-week visitors, to answer questions, and to be on hand to help iron out any difficulties that may arise while they are here. She also handles publicity for the fund and organizes activities for the four sub-chairman that assist her during the two-week summer period. Usually there are children in the families already, she explained, so that no special attention has to be given to prescribing activities. The idea is really to create a whole family situation, especially one with a father at its head, which in so many cases has been lacking in the child's experience.

The four-year old Families for Inter-racial Adoption, is, she said, her second love. Again, she is involved in publicizing and recruiting for this program as well. Most of the recruiting is done by holding small coffee discussions in people's homes, largely with people who are already looking for children to adopt. The point, she said, is not really to persuade people who might not be otherwise interested in the program, because you can not really anticipate for them how they will handle some of the problems that will come up in the difficult teenage years, but rather to encourage people who may have some inherent interest in the program.

While there are no particular qualifications for families who are interested in adopting these children, Nan added, many are afraid. She herself feels from her own experience that, "If you love children, you will have an understanding that will enable you to do a lot more than you think you can."

Jean Dewar Farrell '43

[After raising four children, Jean recently completed all the requirements for her master's degree at Salem State College, and expects to graduate in June with a Master of Education in Guidance. Returning to college a few years ago, she was one of the thirteen first women graduates in the Women's Day Program at Northeastern University, where she was also awarded the first scholarship. Meanwhile, evenings she attended classes at Framingham State College and between semesters she went to summer classes at Tufts and Boston University to complete her program in 1968. Presently Jean is certified by the state in guidance and teaching and is working for the Cerebral Palsy Clinic and Preschool where she is in charge of all psychological and social services. Also a member of a Lasell family, Jean's mother, the late Emma Perley Dewar, and her aunt, Margaret Perley Downey, both graduated in 1920, and a sister, Ann Dewar Condon, was graduated in 1949.]

Jean began talking about her "two for one" life, as she calls it (with first a family, then a full-fledged career) by explaining about cerebral palsy, which is an insult during or at the time of birth, in the motor action center of the body. If you think of it as a normal brain with BB shot, she suggested, you can better visualize both the localized damage, which produces normal intelligence with mild problems with the arms or legs, or the diffuse damage, which causes the quadriplegic (use of arms and legs impaired up to 50%), the mentally retarded, and the perceptually handicapped. Of these generally, the more aware, the brighter the student, the deeper the emotional handicap. "It is, you see," she added, "truly a multiple handicap."

Working through the North Shore Cerebral Palsy Association, her aim has been to bring tools for growth to both the clinic, where out-patient physical and speech therapy is conducted, and to the pre-school program, where placements may be made for children anywhere between the ages of four and eight (there are no hard-line age requirements). Here they receive academic readiness and social programs similar to those of regular schools along with special speech and motor therapy.

In most cases the children have a severe perceptual handicap, which can be seen when they are asked to translate a perceived object, such as a square for example, onto paper. Although the object is seen, they have no body orientation and their direction loss means they cannot draw it. The reason for this is that since this type of child has been paralyzed since birth, he has never crawled, or bumped into things, or fallen, and so doesn't know where his body ends and the world begins; there is no middle of him, no right or left; hence, he also has no reading ability.

The most important thing she learned, when starting this work, she said, did not come from a book but in her first field assignment when she realized it wasn't the specific job she might be assigned to that mattered, but what she might make out of it. So, when she was assigned as a home visitor at the North Shore center a year and a half ago, she began training the children psychologically for school, and now she is working as the psychologist in charge of all social and psychological services, including testing.

"My day runs a year," she explained, "and I call it following the trail." First I interview the child to decide what to do, determining speech abilities and school level through: a home visit to get medical and social data on the child; taking part in the pre-school program to observe the child's ability to respond as well as his independent action; and then formal psychological testing, using verbal activity and fine motor control tests.

And this has become the real focal point of her work, since she says, there simply are no tests that adequately measure the ability of these children. Since they measure performance, they can tell you a child is functioning on a retarded level, but this does not necessarily mean he is retarded mentally. Here the challenge is know your materials well enough to read true ability through them. It's a frontier where you must devise ways of measuring and communicating that have never been tried before.

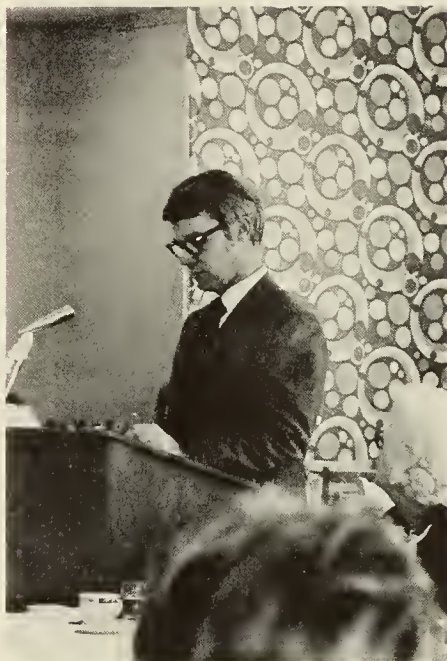

After testing there are staff consultations to design a curriculum to fit the child's individual needs, according to his development profile. Next, you think about placement which requires reevaluating the children and reassessing the school services which are continually changing. Then there is counseling at home with the child's parents, since many of these children are bankrupt emotionally.

As a next step all placements are followed up. Usually there is some advising involved and testing in the public school. The outside activities that can be developed for them are continued too, since they gain in importance when, as is often the case, the world closes in on these children. She has devised recreational programs such as arts, music, crafts, and bowling. She supervises some of these on Saturdays, and finds time too to try to raise money for these programs; trying to get legislative action for state support, since most of the children are on welfare. Eventually she hopes to get a mobile unit going to take therapists and the testing to the schools.

When people ask Jean if it isn't depressing working with these children, she answers, "Not at all. If you wonder why suffering, you can look at these children who are so brave and happy, so flexible, and are so much deeper and more mature people for their suffering."

Medallion Recipients

The following citations were made by Lasell Alumnae, Inc. President Sandra Shelton Fitch '56 before Dr. Greene presented each of the three recipients with the Lasell Medallion.

Ida Beane Rice '15

Ida Beane Rice was graduated from Lasell in 1915, married in 1916 and until 1950 was busy raising her family—a son and a daughter—now expanded to include seven grandchildren and one great-granddaughter. Plus the list of usual activities, including courses in law, writing, religion and painting, Mrs. Rice has been very active in the life of her church, the Waban Woman's Club, the Newton League of Woman Voters and the D.A.R.

In 1949 she met Dr. Miriam Van Waters, the famed penologist, who was superintendent of the Massachusetts Correctional Institution, the only prison for women in the state. Mrs. Rice greatly admired Dr. Van Waters and under her guidance worked with a group—"Friendly Visitors"—who counselled and visited with the confined girls.

Convinced that a secure, decent place to live—help to find and retain a job—an opportunity to live within the law in a community—was vital for a woman released from prison, Mrs. Rice, then president of Friends of Framingham, organized and established the first Half Way House. With no precedent to follow and deep-rooted prejudices to overcome, it was a long struggle to complete the pioneer project. The House has been in continuous operation for seven years and has meant Hope to many discouraged women.

Mrs. Rice now serves as an Honorary Director of Friends of Framingham; certainly no way of life is more rewarding than service unto others. It is a distinct pleasure for Lasell Alumnae Incorporated to award a Medallion to Ida Beane Rice.

Dorothy Burnham Eaton '20

From the world of letters and from the Class of 1920 comes the next Lasell graduate to be honored today. The poems of Dorothy Burnham Eaton have been included in various anthologies and have appeared in several publications, including poetry magazines and in: The Saturday Review, Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, McCall's, Poet Lore, Lyric, Nature, Outdoor World, N.Y. Times, and former Herald Tribune. Her book of selected verse, "True Places," was published in 1955.

Mrs. Eaton has won the Golden Rose of the New England Poetry Club, awarded for distinguished service to poetry. Other prizes include those given by Poet Lore, Lyric, Poetry Society of Virginia, and the Poetry Society of America.

In recent years she has taught classes and individuals in versification and the enjoyment of poetry. For the past four years her essay series, "Our Two Acres," which describes the wild life visitors to the Eaton's country home in Harvard, Massachusetts, has been a regular twice-a-month feature in the Christian Science Monitor.

Mrs. Eaton is a member of many local and national poetry societies and has made a gift of poetry and literary magazines to the Lasell Library.

Adele Bigham Nelson '24

Adele Bigham Nelson, founder and chairman of the Council on Recreation and Education for Senior Citizens in Onondaga County, is Executive Director of the Corinthian Foundation, Inc. of Syracuse, N.Y. Her work with senior citizens can be traced back to 1928 when she launched her career as a volunteer worker through the Junior League. Representing Central New York on a five-man State Council on Recreation for the Elderly since its inception in 1956, Mrs. Nelson continues to encourage the establishment and operation of municipal recreational programs for older men and women.

Mrs. Nelson was selected as All-Time Woman of Achievement by the Syracuse Post Standard in 1968; prior recognitions include the Syracuse Rotary Club Community Service Award; in 1956 she was named Woman of the Year by the Jewish Home of Central New York. She is a member of the National Council on the Aging, The Gerontological Society and various civic auxiliaries and organizations in Syracuse.

The editors of the 1924 Lamp were far-sighted in their personal evaluation: "Del is one of the more recent recruits to our ranks, but her generosity and helpfulness have placed her among the tried veterans." Mrs. Nelson's daughter, Diane Nelson Cowan, is a member of Lasell's Centennial Class—1951; her sister-in-law is Dorothy Ely Bigham '21.

Lasell Alumnae Incorporated is grateful for this opportunity to honor Adele Bigham Nelson.

BRAGDON IN REVIEW

Statuesque on the hill above the newer campus, Bragdon has for generations of Lasell graduates not only served a range of functions, but has stood as an historic landmark blending the past with today. Her full familiar grandure, however, was acquired slowly, from her early life in the 19th century when she stood at something considerably less than half of her present size.

Cushman Hall, as Bragdon was first called, was planned by Boston architects Billings & Sleeper for the six and a half acre lot bought by Edward Lasell on what was already an historic Woodland Road—known to have been in existence since 1664 and to have been the county highway over which General Burgoyne's captive army retreated to Boston in 1777. When the doors were finally opened in November of 1851, one hundred and nine young ladies moved in to mark the beginning of the seminary.

Chronologically, the first changes to the building were made, according to Ruth Hopkins Spooner in "Lasell's First Century, 1851–1951," under the administration of Charles W. Cushing (1864–1874). At that time, she says, "Gas was installed for lighting," with the intention of "rendering the building safe in regard to fire" **

Sometime later, before the east wing was built, the roof was raised the height of one floor and the studio put on top. From this studio, which in 1878 consisted of two large rooms called the Crayon Room and Oil Painting Studio, soon sprang an art gallery which by 1890 was flourishing with 1,900 pieces, many of them originals, including: color, oil, and water paintings, engravings, sculpture—and photographs—which were all given a catalogue listing.

In May 1881 ground was broken for the new east wing, followed closely by construction of the south wing—in all more than doubling the size of the building at that time at an additional cost of $30,000. The plans of this first addition, according to Mrs. Spooner, provided for the gymnasium and dining room in the basement; principal's apartments, kitchen for cooking classes, and an elevator on the south side of the first floor hall; principal's, teachers' and students' parlours, guest and music rooms, and offices on the north side; students' rooms on the second floor; a society room, sanitorium, and eight or nine student rooms on the third floor; and piano practice rooms and store room for trunks on the fourth floor. Mr. Ordway notes that the 12–15 pianos kept in these practice rooms by a music department that was thriving during the first two decades of the 20th century were in 1920 replaced with new ones which "were hoisted the five floors in the rear and taken in through a window."

A little while later... circa 1865

*Parenthetically, it's perhaps interesting to note that when fire did break out much later (in 1908), it started in an oil soaked table where the watchman filled the big kerosene lamps used in the kitchen, according to Mr. Earl Ordway, half-brother of Dr. Winslow, who for years was in charge of buildings and grounds for the College. In his notebook he recorded, "This table was at the foot of the stairs going down from the kitchen to the basement. When the fire department arrived they found the hydrant on Grove Street frozen, but they were able to keep the fire from going above the first floor, though some walls on that floor were broken open to stop the fire, especially in the hall and chapel walls." Although the damage was not extensive, it did require considerable renovation in the area called the "Back Bay" where rooms for office and dining room personnel were subsequently replaced by classrooms.

It was an era when interest in physical education was high, occasioning the building of the new gymnasium, or south wing, in 1883-4, together with Carter Hall. In this gymnasium was a "ten-pin alley," which remained until about 1912, and a "natatorium," Lasell's swimming pool. Mrs. Spooner adds in her description of this period: "A resident physician looked after the health, habits of dress, and recreation of the pupils. With this care and regular hours there were very few 'delicate' girls left."

Almost fifteen years later the 26-member class of 1898 on its graduation made it possible for Bragdon to stretch to her full rambling stature by making a gift of $25,000—the largest of the then-traditional class gifts ever presented to the college. With this fund (which they intended for a memorial hall with a chapel, club rooms, and art gallery) construction began the following year on the south side of the gymnasium, for an addition to be connected to the main building by a covered bridge. Above the ground floor, which was set aside for a bicycle room, were sorority rooms;

With that, her skeletal growth was complete for a while, leaving only the lower part of the east end addition to the library to be completed in 1914 and the upper part some years later.

In 1881 technological developments began to make their imprint on her way of life when the first school telephone was installed in December, opening communication between the seminary and the larger towns between Boston and Worcester. Mr. Ordway writes that in 1903 this wall model was the only telephone in the school. In-house communication was accomplished between kitchen and boiler room and the "preceptress' rooms" upstairs by whistle tube. In the laundry in the basement five women did all the laundry for students, help, and all the linen—a great deal of which was hand ironing.

“At various times,” he adds, “the electrical requirements were taken care of by our own plant. In 1903 electricity was generated by a 15 h.p. and 10 h.p. horseshoe generator driven by single acting Westinghouse 2-cycle engines. In 1911 a Nash 25 h.p. engine and generator were installed. This first was run on distillate and then later changed to gas. A storage battery was used to take care of day and late night loads.” Later it was replaced by a small gas engine-generator. Coal or coke was used for fuel in both the kitchen and oven in the bake shop, located on the ground floor. Though the kitchen ranges were converted to gas later, the oven used hard fuel as long as it was used. (This brick construction, measuring about 10 x 10 x 7 feet, when demolished, apparently supplied all the school's brick needs for many years thereafter.) In Carter a practice kitchen and Home Economics department kitchen depended on wood-burning stoves.

Change across the many decades represented by a history now spanning a grand 120 years, brought many adaptations to the interior, too. Walls were removed, rooms rebuilt, new uses found for them. The old chapel became the library, then classrooms; the south side was converted to classrooms and offices; administrative offices were shifted and eventually all moved to other buildings as the campus spread around the original “Seminary Building” site. And to each generation of students something will always be remembered of how it once was.

Skating Class Introduced by Senior

It happens every Thursday . . . a busload of Lasell Junior College girls, carrying ice skates, head toward the MDC rink at Cleveland Circle, Brighton, to take an accredited course in skating.

If we can't tell which is the teacher, it's because she's one of them . . . a liberal arts student at Lasell Junior College, Robin DeAngelis, 19, of 111 Silverbrook Road, Milton.

Robin, who has been working on her 7th figure skating test (the 8th is the final and gold medal test)—has decided she may turn professional.

She is the only Lasell student ever to teach there and the class is the school's first student-taught class. There was a moment or two on the first day when she must have wondered whether it was a good idea.

On the first day of the assigned class, she double checked on the rink they were to have used. She was more than chagrined when the arrangements had to be changed because of poor ice conditions for figure skating. Last minute flurry of telephone calls . . . inquiries . . . new arrangements . . . on her way. . . .

For the moment, she was calling herself "Robin-Run-Ragged," but since then, things have settled down, and the girls tell her they are enjoying and learning a lot.

"Of course, we haven't progressed much beyond the basic stroking across the ice, and step, step, glide," Robin explained. "None of the girls have to cling to the barrier to stay on their feet, so that's good, and some would like to do more, but I tell them there's no point going on until they've really mastered one phase."

This is a standard that the 5'3" brunette has set for herself as well. She has always felt she was competing against herself in exhibition skating, and was always trying harder.

"No skater is perfect," says Robin. "The closest to it is Peggy Fleming."

Skating seriously since she was 12, she participated in classes in figure skating and free style skating summers at Michigan State University and at Troy, N.Y. and Rochester Institute of Technology, Rochester, N.Y.

Here, among other places, she says she learned to value the student-teacher relationship.

One of the lessons she learned was to win or lose with a smile, not too easy for anyone, let alone a really serious teenager.

One way she gained extra understanding was to serve as a trial judge—to sit in with the regular judges on skating tests—to watch the applicant and make her own decisions. The decision of the trial judge is only for herself and in no way affects the outcome of the applicant's test. A judge's lot is not an easy one.

Neither is a skater's if she wants to improve all the time.

Robin's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph DeAngelis, have always been pulling for her in practical ways. "There were times I was discouraged—if I failed a test, for example—and I wanted to stop, they kept me going."

Also, Mrs. DeAngelis served as chauffeur, seamstress and whatever else was needed. Miniskirts were no new thing for Robin, whose costumes through the years were made by her mother. She never liked micro-minis.

"Among other things," she said, "skaters often don't have the legs for them."

She enjoys maxi skirts, though, and the only midi she'll consider is a midi coat.

Robin was active in the Commonwealth Skating Club of Weymouth and is a member of the Boston Skating Club.

She has skated in the New England Regional Figure Skating intermediate division and in the novice ladies' class. She has also been invited to skate in the Southern New Hampshire skating shows by Ray Hawes, director, "not as a competitor or champion skater," emphasizes Robin, "but just as myself."

She has always enjoyed dancing, and her ballet lessons have stood her in good stead on the rink. She is also finding out the joy of interpreting music through skating.

Skating is the medium in which she communicates best, although she has other interests. Fashion is one. She was on the first teenage fashion board at South Shore Plaza, and was queen of the senior prom at Milton High School one year.

In 1969, she was a Christmas angel in the Boston Skating Club pageant. Past angels, who skate to carols and are always dressed in shimmering white for the occasion, have the privilege of choosing the following year's angel.

WOMEN IN POLITICS

Mary B. Newman, former member of the Massachusetts Legislature, shares some views on careers for women in political offices.

During the spring there was considerable dialogue on campus about careers for women, and although not all the speakers were directing their remarks specifically to a Lasell audience, their message was pertinent to the broad issues of women's role and the search for relevance in education today.

An impressive gathering of female talent at the Eighth Annual conference on "Careers in Industry and Business," held at Lasell during spring vacation, had some particularly poignant insights to offer. Sponsored by the Newton-Needham Chamber of Commerce in cooperation with the Massachusetts Secondary School Principals Association, the Massachusetts Association of Women Deans and Counselors, and the Massachusetts School Counselors Association, the conference this year drew approximately 200 high school principals and counselors to hear panelists describe "New Career Opportunities for Women."

With Pat Collins of WBZ-TV moderating the discussion, two sets of panelists representing women in advertising, banking, education, hotel and travel businesses, industry, and politics, painted a rather grim picture of vestigial prejudice and stereotyping still influencing women's opportunities across all of their respective fields. They did offer the collective conclusion that with an overcompensating effort and considerable sacrifice of personal life, women can become successful, but only if they are willing to "try harder."

While in the consensus of the panelists it is still institutions, and specifically, stereotyping by male administrators within these institutions, that account for much of the inequality that persists in spite of policy advances and individual achievement, Mrs. Mary B. Newman, speaking as a former member of the Massachusetts legislature about careers for women in politics, suggested that subtleties of attitudes among members of both sexes may really be perpetuating the static role of women today. Because her remarks reach beyond politics into the nature of some of these attitudes, they have been included here in their entirety.

With Mrs. Newman on the panel were: Mrs. Frances Fletcher, Innkeeper of the Holiday Inn, Newton; and Mrs. Margaret Dezotell, Vice-Treasurer of the Newton Savings Bank. The second panel included Miss Barbara Bancroft, Office Manager of B.B.D.O. in Boston; Mrs. Hope Danielson, Assistant Director of Personnel for the Newton Public Schools; and Mrs. Barbara MacKinnon, Personnel Manager for the Sherman Division of St. Regis Paper Co.

Mrs. Newman:

I was listening and realizing as I heard the closing remarks of my predecessor on the panel that, sure enough, you can get trained for banking, and you can get trained for hotel work, there are a lot of careers for women for which you can go out and study to reassure and prepare yourself. There's kind of a set course about the whole thing. And that cast a new light all of a sudden on an old story.

I was talking with a group of Harvard Law wives about ten years ago, as bright, and heads up, and interesting a group of gals as you'd want to meet. And I was encouraging them to get into politics. I was talking about women in politics and what it's like. Then in the question period one of them said to me, in a rather reproachful tone, "But, Mrs. Newman, you talk as if all of us should be willing to get into politics, and you haven't asked if we're qualified or not. Now, myself," she said, "I'm not a lawyer, and I don't know anything about taxes." I said, "Well, honey, you know in the state legislature—there are 240 people in it—right at the moment 236 of them are men and 4 of them are women in the house; in the senate it's 39 to 1.

Do you know how the average guy got into the legislature? He belonged to a fraternal organization or veteran's group; so one of his friends that he knew in the fraternal organization or veteran's group was in the legislature or on the City Council. And some time before elections one year he started to help him by going out on the sound truck or passing out cards or helping them with their rallies in some fashion. He did this for a couple of elections and then his friend decided to run for something else or dropped out of politics and somebody said, "Well, Bill, why don't you run, you know everybody?" And he said, "I think I will." He didn't ask anybody if he knew anything about taxes or whether he needed a law degree.

And in a basic sort of way I think Bill's probably right. To be a

"To be a representative in government doesn't necessarily mean to be a person who knows more than anybody else in the legislature. It's a person who knows, and understands, and is trusted by the people that he wants to represent."

". . . judgment, understanding, and call it integrity, are the three most important things in the minds of people."

representative in government doesn't necessarily mean to be a person who knows more than anybody else in the legislature. It's a person who knows, and understands, and is trusted by the people that he wants to represent.

You know it's kind of startling to think about those figures: four out of 240 in the house and one out of 40 in the senate. You know that women's lib or no women's lib, we're a long way from being a matriarchy in Massachusetts; and what's more, that's a decrease. The high at one time was 2 women in the senate and 7 in the house. So we've come down from 9 to 5, and at this rate of attrition we're in a considerable amount of trouble.

This is kind of surprising when you think 53% of the voters in Massachusetts are women. So, as our moderator said, it's a question of who wants to hire whom, but it's not solely a question of who wants to hire whom. It's also who wants to go out and be hired.

When I think back to what our foremothers, if I may call them that, went through in order to get the vote and to establish their right to be persons in the United States of America, I get a little embarrassed sometimes about what some of us think about, and are nervous about, and are sort of self-conscious about, here in 1971.

Some of you may know the name of, or may even have known, Jennie Loitmann Barron, a member of the superior court—and a great actress, really, the Bernhardt of the Massachusetts bench. And I remember a story she told about the time when, as a young girl of 17 or 18, she was working in a semester she took off from Columbia, for women's suffrage in Massachusetts. It was a Saturday night in Davis Square in Somerville, before the saloons had been closed, and things were a little rough in Davis Square. Jennie was standing up in the back of an open touring car with two other women in the front and a woman sitting beside her. One of the men, who had come out of one of the saloons, was getting a little bit rough in his talk; there was a lot of laughing going on, and the women were kind of nervous. One of them said to Jennie, "If you can't keep them quiet, we'd better move on, I'm afraid the crowd's getting a little bit restless." And Jennie Loitmann Barron said, "and I looked at him," she said, "and it came to me, and I said, 'That man can vote and my own mother can't.' Well," she said, "they almost lynched him."

Politics 50 years ago, when our foremothers were fighting and working so hard and so intelligently to get the vote, was a pretty difficult field for women. But I wonder if the time hasn't come, now, that it's not only almost demanded that we get into politics, but it's also much easier. Because politics has moved from Davis Square on a Saturday night in an open touring car, from the back of a railroad train, pretty much into people's living rooms. And I think there is not a person in this room, a man or woman, who hasn't got the capacity, if this seems to be the thing to be done, to relate to his or her neighbors.

I think there are two real barriers to the thought of women getting into politics. The first is, as my young friend from the Harvard Law wives suggested, that we think too highly of it: it's something that demands some kind of training, some kind of excellence, some kind of superior knowledge.

The other, which is just as compelling in the opposite direction, perhaps more so, is the feeling that politics is a pretty dirty business; that it's conducted in smoke-filled back rooms; that it's a matter of deals and compromises; that really nice people must have an awful time when they get mixed up in that bunch of thieves.

When I used to go out with the League of Women voters and talk about our legislative programs and how we tried to influence people to vote for certification of teachers and better treatment of women offenders and those things, someone would often say to me, "Well, Mrs. Newman, do you think of yourself as a lobbyist?" and I'd say, "Yes" . . . And the response would be, "Oh, (gasp) you're one of those people."

When I got into the legislature and began to talk to people about what it was like to be in the legislature; and somebody would ask me, "But you don't think of yourself as a politician do you?" and I would say, "Yes,"—the gasps would be even louder. And I would realize that one of the great problems was that I had apparently graduated without getting too much tainted from pick-pocketing to bankrobbing, but that I had entered a field which really shocks people, that you thought of on a professional level.

And I think this is one of the most frightening things, and one of the most serious lacks in our view of politics. Because we think of the institutionalized forms with which we govern ourselves and our community as being operated by a bunch of people with whom a decent person can not very easily associate, we're leaving the most important social activities of our community lives pretty much at the mercy of these people, and not caring who they are. And if we don't care who they are, we won't run, we won't go out and work for others who do run; we won't think of this as a place of high calling to which people who have this kind of idealism and the kind of aspiration and ability that we want, ought to aspire in order to be elected.

What is it that people really are looking for in their candidates? The first time I ran for office in Cambridge, I started out as everybody does that reads the books and talks to people, to ring doorbells. And I went up and down in the ward that felt itself the most isolated and called itself the forgotten ward, handing people my card saying, "I'm Mary Newman, I'm a candidate for the legislature, I've come to introduce myself."

And while I was doing this (and finding it scary but very interesting), I came across a friend of mine, a woman who had been very active in the League of Women Voters. She said, "I understand you're ringing doorbells. I think that's wonderful. How many have you rung?" and I said, "I guess about a 1000 so far." And she said, "Well, now tell me, what do you say when they ask you what your platform is?" And I thought, oh—and I knew her well, she's an issue-oriented politician and a scholar's wife—and I said, "Elizabeth, I hate to tell you, but nobody's asked me what my platform is." She was really shocked . . . and then she said, "You can't mean it. Well then, is it just a matter of popularity?" And I said, "No, I don't think so." But she started me questioning.

In the next 1200 or so doorbells I rang, I tried to listen beyond the questions of, "Where did you get the picture taken" and "You mean it's you that's running and not your husband," and "Where do you live in Cambridge dear," the typical questions you get for the beginning of your call, . . . to what was it that the voter was really seeking when she or he had time to ask me in for a few minutes of conversation. And I came to realize, to believe at least, and I have subsequently become more convinced this is so, that the voter is not an issue-oriented person. In very rare cases is there one single overriding issue which is going to be the decisive one in whether you vote for the person or not. Nobody has time or knowledge to keep a tally sheet and most people know it.

What the voter is asking is, first of all, perhaps: I don't know all the things that are going to be coming up, but is this the kind of person I want to have making decisions for me, on matters I don't know about? What kind of judgment does she, or he, have?

The second thing, I think was brought out when people would tell me about troubles that their cousin had had, or their husband, or someone who couldn't get a job or who had been sick, and it ran something like this: I don't have anything particularly bothering me right now, but if I did have a problem, is this the kind of a person who would care what happens to me? There was a kind of a search for understanding.

Third, and, I've come to believe this is the most important: there were people who started to find out how you stood on something, then gave you a violent argument, and watched you like a hawk to see if you'd wench on it. Those people, I think, were looking for a kind of honesty, or a kind of integrity; and they were saying, am I going to get a straight story out of this person, or am I just going to get another run around when I have an opinion?

So I think that judgment, understanding, and call it integrity, are the three most important things in the minds of people. And if you believe that, then politics, responding to these three qualities people are seeking, becomes a high calling. And if you're cynical about it, you're letting your whole government and community down.

Naturally if you go into politics as a woman, you are going to have problems. And I smile for myself. It's as my predecessor [on the panel] said, "you have to know a little bit more." It's like running the 100-yard dash, but you have to run 110 yards. But it can be done. Sometimes you hear people say, "It's too bad they ever gave women the vote," and then they turn around, and say, "Oh, but I don't mean you. . . ."

I think that many men who go into politics and find themselves in the state legislature have thought of politics as almost exclusively a masculine area. And when they find there are women here, their first thought is—they're a little bit pleased; they like to have a few. I don't know what would be the maximum number of women in the legislature from the point of view of men—I'm pretty sure four is too small.

But I think that we can no longer overlook the fact that politics is a time-consuming and important area of our lives. And we can not any longer overlook the fact that we can not leave political service to those who are eminent and successful—and busy, among the male sex. Young people and women must look at themselves as part of a group from which more qualified candidates are available in the political sense. And the candidate that's available is somebody who has time to run, and will run, that's electable, and could serve if he was elected.

Now when you stop and think of your ideal candidate you think of an attractive man, he's someone between 35 and 45, he's probably got a college education. Of course, he's done pretty well in the community, as a civic leader. He's got a successful business or profession, and you think, wouldn't he be a marvelous representative. So somebody goes over and talks to him about running for office and he says, "gee I can't, I've got 3 kids getting ready to go to college, one of them already in college . . . I'm going to be a senior partner in another year." He's up to his ears in the kinds of things that have made him the kind of person he wants to be.

"Naturally if you go into politics as a woman, you are going to have problems. . . . It's like running the 100-yard dash, but you have to run 110 yards."

And sitting right across the room from him, is Mrs. Potential. She's been to college. She's been active in all these civic things that he's been active in. She's helped him in training for his profession or worked with him in starting his business. She has just about every bit of the qualifications that he has, and she probably knows her neighbors a little bit better than he does. Her three children are getting ready to go to college too, and she's got time to serve. If you went around to any community and picked the free-to-serve person, I think you'd get a far better qualified person, who's free-to-run, among the women.

Now I think we women have got not only the self-confidence but the humility to see that this is a job that needs to be done. But we don't have to worry about whether we're going to feel foolish. Of course, we're going to feel foolish. Everybody feels foolish. That's not important, you get over it. You're going to have butterflies in your stomach not just the first time you talk but for the first 6 months that you talk. And every time you talk in a new place for a long time after that. But that's not important, everybody does that and gets over it.

I think what's held women back, has been partly prejudice, of course. Partly prejudice on the part of other women? Of course, though there are pluses. There are people who will vote for you because you're a woman just as much as there are people who won't vote for you because you're a woman. But basically, what has held women back, I think, in the political field is an understanding of the need of our society, and the humility as well as the concern which will take you out to ring those first 1000 doorbells.

Question, from the floor: Mrs. Newman, can you tell us something about what a person can do to serve government rather than in an elected position?

I suppose there are three really distinct areas of political work to be done, one of which is avocational. There are, of course, a great many areas of work that do not involve running for an elective office.

In the governor's staff, to a certain extent the legislative staff, even in the state legislature, and of course quite extensively at the congressional level, there are women and men doing research, handling public relations, writing speeches, carrying on important legislative and administrative work. For this kind of career, a woman would, in almost every instance, I think, want to have some kind of work beyond high school. I think the college training is important: work in government, in history, in economics and statistics, would be an extremely helpful step.

“ . . . we cannot leave political service to those who are eminent and successful—and busy, among the male sex.”

“But basically, what has held women back, I think, in the political field is an understanding of the need of our society and the humility as well as the concern which will take you out to ring those first 1000 doorbells.”

A law degree is, I think, probably less important than it seems. While in one or two intern programs on the congressional level that I've been quite familiar with, they do take some law students, they really prefer students who are juniors in college, who will have another year in which to make use of the motivation they acquired as summer interns, who will come to work and think of themselves as people who have been involved in research or administrative work, rather than just in legal work.

There are in most legislatures, including our own in Massachusetts, some sorts of intern programs. Some of them are summer intern programs; some of them are year-round intern programs which have been sponsored by such foundations as the Ford Foundation and others. Some of our most intelligent and useful young aides around the state house are people who have come in through these intern programs. The summer one doesn't offer a very wide opportunity. Last year I think they had 120 young people who passed the examination and would have been satisfactory on the interview, and they found it possible to place about 15 of them in jobs for the summer, partly because of budgetary problems.

Ten or fifteen years ago I was told by a man within the state service for some time, that the state was really being run by about 100 people, most of whom had come into state service during the depression in the 30's, or just after. I came to identify with these people. Most of them retired and the others will retire in the next 3 or 4 or 5 years. I can tell you that there is a dire need in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for men and women who have the same intelligence, capability and dedication that those people are taking away with them.

One of the big problems about getting into state service is that so much of it takes you through the channels of civil service, and so much of what is open in civil service, is at the level of junior clerk or senior clerk typist, or the junior engineering aide, something like that, from which you move on. State salaries in those middle grades are not very inspiring to young people today—not even female young people today.

But it's an area in which you have a tremendous demand and there's a growing gap—if a vacuum can grow, we've got one growing. And if it isn't filled the state service is going to fail much more seriously than it has in the last 15 to 20 years.

I suggest to you that now we need two things in this area. We need the vocational aspiration of people who want to give their time and energies to government. We need the avocational efforts of those who want to make the civil service responsive, opening the doors for these people.

Wilder N. Smith

On April 6, 1971 Lasell lost a devoted friend when Wilder N. Smith, former Chairman of the Board of Trustees, died after a short illness at the Sarasota Memorial Hospital near his Florida retirement home.

Elected to the Board of Trustees in 1950, he served the College for twelve years as both Vice-President of the Corporation and a member of the Finance Committee. In 1962 he was named Chairman of the Board, succeeding the late Priscilla Alden Wolfe '19. He remained Chairman until his retirement in 1969.

A leader in the Boston retail community, Mr. Smith was treasurer and comptroller of the Gilchrist Company with which he was associated for 44 years. He graduated from the Boston University School of Business Administration and later also became president of the Credit Bureau, treasurer of the Retail Trade Board, and president of the Charge-Plate Associates.

Last year the Board of Management of Lasell Alumnae, Inc. awarded Mr. Smith a Medallion at its 1970 Annual Alumnae Council Meeting in grateful recognition of his long and dedicated service to Lasell with the following citation: "Upon his retirement as Chairman of the Board we wish to say thank you for a job most well done. It is a distinct privilege for Lasell Alumnae, Incorporated to award a Medallion to this loyal and devoted friend who has given so untiringly of himself to promote and sustain the good name of Lasell."

Mr. Smith is survived by his wife, Antoinette Meritt Smith '23, also a former trustee and member of the Board of Management of Lasell Alumnae, Inc. until her retirement in 1970.

CLUBS

Florida

Florida Gold Coast Club held its Annual Meeting on Saturday, February 6 at Heilman's Restaurant in Fort Lauderdale. Special recognition was given to Lela Cones Shaffer, a member of the Class of 1906 and to Betty Wells Tuttle '29, who traveled the furthest distance. The group is looking forward to meeting Dr. and Mrs. Greene at next year's Luncheon.

Western Massachusetts

Mrs. William E. Roy (Betty Smith '43) entertained Western Massachusetts Club at her home for Luncheon on Wednesday, March 17. Guests of honor were Dr. and Mrs. Greene.

'04

On January 17 the Waltham Hospital dedicated its new building, the Walter R. Amesbury Building in honor of Walter Raleigh Amesbury who served as Comptroller of the hospital from 1930 to 1933, Administrator from 1941 to 1959, and Treasurer from 1933 to 1970.

Mr. and Mrs. Amesbury (Jane Ford Amesbury x-'04) attended the special January dedication and ribbon-cutting ceremonies where Mr. Amesbury received a silver tray marking his years of service to the hospital and bearing the inscription:

In grateful recognition of over 40 years of service to The Waltham Hospital and upon the occasion of the dedication of the Amesbury Building. The Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees have hereunto affixed their signatures.

Ruth Stokes Crick x-'13 writes: "I am enclosing a clipping from the Middletown (Penna.) Journal that I think might be of interest to any Lasell-mates that may remember me. My roommate was the late Ruth Ketcham from Oak Park, Illinois. We shared the same first names and the same birth dates." The clipping was a picture of Mrs. Crick displaying a sugar bowl and cream pitcher given her by Major and Mrs. Stuart Roosa and family. Mrs. Crick recalls her "baby-sitting" days for the Roosa family when they resided at Meade Heights. Major Roosa was command module pilot for the Apollo 14 flight.

(Lasell has another "contact" with Apollo 14: Capt. Alan Shepard's

'17

The Class extends sincere sympathy to Alice Jenks Nickerson, whose husband, Leon E. Nickerson, died on February 20, 1971 at Roger Williams General Hospital, Providence, R.I. Mr. Nickerson was a former councilman in Cranston and was well known among Rhode Island yachtsmen.

'19

Helen Beede continues to keep track of former students and former faculty. From her, we learn that Rae Salisbury Richard's ('37) son is with the Army in Germany; daughter, Roz, a student at the University of Georgia; Scott, Jr., in high school.

Betty Swaney Parrella (Clothing '48-'52) lists her personal highlights for 1970: (1) Retired from teaching; (2) Recipient of $1000 for her participation with her student Mina Kuhr in the College Inn Cook-In Contest; (3) Mina and Betty attended the Home Economics Convention in Cleveland as guests of the R. J. Reynolds Foods Company to receive their awards; (4) Joined the staff of the R. J. Reynolds Foods Company as an educational consultant.

And from Johanne Black Bamford (English '47-'52): "We are about mid-stream in life, and we feel a little bit as though everything were being thrown at us at about the same time. Despite all this, I say that God is still with me. I am still with wheelchair and I still sound pretty dreadful—not as bad as I sounded last year, but pretty bad, just the same. I have thought several times of the analogy between something that happened to us last summer, and our lives right now. We were fishing for mackerel when we saw a thunder storm coming. Naturally, we pulled in our fish lines and our anchor just as fast as we could and beat a hasty retreat. We had just gotten under cover, when the storm broke. There were hail stones the size of marbles in that thunder storm. They would have scarred us up a bit, if we had been still out. But most important of all, there was a beautiful rainbow when the storm was over."

Louise Stevens Prince is looking forward to a spring vacation in Sarasota, Fla. She is hoping too there will be a small "Reunion" with Peg Reid Perry and the Wilder Smiths (Toni Meritt '23). In early March Peg will be in Holland and in Spain, where she will visit with son Jim and wife.

'29

Gwendolyn McDonald Black, daughter of the late Statira P. McDonald, received an Honorary Doctor of Laws degree on October 20, 1970 from Mount Allison University, Sackville, New Brunswick. The Citation read in part:

"Mrs. Black received her Bachelor of Music from Mount Allison, and, after further piano study with Bruce Simonds in Boston, she moved to Franconia, New Hampshire, where she was music companion in a small cottage hospital for social misfits. Armed with this training and experience, she was prepared to join the Mount Allison faculty where she taught piano and harmony. A year later she became the bride of Col. J. L. Black. The Blacks have two sons, one daughter and four grandchildren.

"Mrs. Black's interests have been wide and varied. Her sympathy and concern for the handicapped, underprivileged and the sick, have found outlets in her outstanding work with retarded children, the Children's Aid Society, and the Victorian Order of Nurses.

"She has served this University as a Regent (1953-64), as a member of the Senate, and on a number of committees, including the library committee, and she is an officer of the Sackville Art Association.

"In 1970 Mrs. Black was given the great honor of being made president of the Canadian University Women's Club, representing 12,000 Canadian university women."

Theodore Parker Lyman was born on December 18, 1970 to Mr. and Mrs. John Lowell Lyman, Jr. of Franklin, Mass. (Mrs. Lyman is the former Sherring Brown, daughter of Alice Pratt Brown.) Very appropriately, he is being called "Teddy"—named for his grandmother???

Adele Kimball Grover x-'29 has been appointed director of service to military families at the Greater Lynn (Mass.) Chapter Red Cross. Adele joined the Greater Lynn Chapter as a staff aide in 1942.

'30

In a Christmas note from Helen (Jimmie) Breed Solberg we learn that her son, Kristian, his wife, Brigitte, and their daughter, Astrid, came from Germany last summer for vacation. Jimmie's blonde, blue-eyed granddaughter celebrated her 3rd birthday with her father and Aunt Linda (Lasell '69), who were also born in July.

'34

From Carol Morehouse Jones: "We Joneses have had a very busy Holiday season. It was climaxed by Kathy's (Jones '67) wedding on January 9th—she was truly a beautiful bride. Norey Dotterer Cullen '67 and Ann Morehouse Baker '68 were bridesmaids. Norey was her roommate at Lasell, senior year, and Ann is my niece. Jane Blackburn, also a bridesmaid, is a sister of Nancy Blackburn, Lasell '69. Bradford W. Ketchum III, our grandson and also Kathy's godson, was ringbearer. He is six and positively adorable. Amy, 22 months, was flower girl and a perfect little doll. It was truly a happy, happy occasion. As you can tell by the write-up, the entire Jones-Ketchum clan took part. The Ketchums are our married daughter, Nancy, and family.

"Our new son-in-law, Diederick, is majoring in German at Lafayette and plans to teach. Both Kathy and Diederick hope to return to New England—they love it there. Of course it is in Kathy's blood, as it is our home and the land of our ancestors. Unfortunately, none of Diederick's family could come from the Netherlands for the wedding. They are coming in June, and we hope to have a great 'get-together' in Easton (Pennsylvania)."

'35

Josie Moore Alexanderson writes from a new address—1030 Oak Lane, Plainfield, N.J. 07060: "We have been here for a year, which I find hard to realize. Still have the house in Sharon (Conn.); when Alex retires, we plan to return there.

"My two sons have returned safely from Korea and Viet Nam, praise be. One is stationed at Fort Dix; the other is working in Syracuse. My daughter is a sophomore at Syracuse University. I have been doing volunteer work as Teacher's Aide in a local kindergarten two mornings a week—this is a whole new area for me. I used to see Marie Kaden '53 at various conferences, but I think my traveling in educational circles is about over! You know, I don't really feel like an old girl, but I guess I am!"

From Marjorie Long Maish: "Our youngest daughter Sally is a Junior at Springfield College—majoring in Physical Education. It is rugged, but she loves it!"

From Barbara Young Leach: "We have been in Australia for six months—it is indeed a different life and sometimes I feel like Alice on the other side of the looking glass. We think of the New England snow—here in the heat of summer, we wake up in the morning and find it is time for tea the day before at home. I am so happy that I returned for Reunion." Barbara's current address is: 7 Elegans Avenue, St. Ives, N.S.W.

Lydia Barnes Smith is: "still enjoying teaching art in the Holden elementary schools. I received my degree at Assumption College in 1967—same year our younger son, Mark, was graduated from Bowdoin; his wife from Vassar. He is now finishing his service in the Navy. Our older son, Scott, is doing electronics for the Space Center. How the years have flown!"

Barbara Iris Johnson enjoyed a vacation in Rome in December. Is now back in Natick, Mass. spending her leisure time babysitting for her two grandsons.

The newspaper account reads in part: "Susan's fitted princess gown of candlelight silk was fashioned with a high neck banded in gold braid and pearls, long sleeves held at the wrist by a wide french cuff. The cathedral train was caught at the shoulders with a matching band of gold braid and pearls. The cathedral length veil of silk illusion fell from the top of the bride's headpiece of matching silk. Designed and created by her Mother, it was completely scrolled in tiny golden beads and pearls. She carried a varied bouquet of white, pearl, and gold french beaded flowers and green ivy also designed and created by the bride's Mother."

JACKIE DARCY: Ingenious and Brave
"Seems strange that Jackie Darcy is neither working at a nearby desk in the Gloucester Daily Times newsroom, nor helping people in the reference room of the Sawyer Free Library, nor driving up in her red Volkswagen. (She had a red Mustang for a while but it wasn't really her type of car.)

"She was more in tune with an English Hillman-Minx she had some years back, a small machine with both dash and dignity, a blend that she herself had. She could talk to the Hillman and get results, but the Mustang did not respond to her.

"Jackie could cope. She had to be ingenious and brave to live the active life she lived, with an ailing heart holding her back. Some who knew her as a little girl remember her lying in a hammock on a porch of her family's cottage at Long Beach, reading and envying the glowing health of the tanned kids passing by and pausing to chat.

"It was said that poor Jackie would never be able to walk.

"But Jackie distinguished herself in Gloucester High School and Lasell Junior College, got a job with the Boston Traveler and lived in an apartment on Commonwealth Avenue, Boston, with other girls. She returned to Gloucester partly at least to care for her father, if memory serves aright. After he died she accelerated her pace, as though she had a premonition that her own life would be short (it ended Jan. 17, 1971, at the age of 44 years).

"She went to Denmark and liked it very much. She worked for Dick Tarr, the printer, and for the Sawyer Free Library, where she did great work with story hours and other literary missionary enterprises. She wrote book reviews and lectured around town. She opened her home to girls from a big family.

"She was a YMCA girls' club adviser, and a key person in the American Field Service International Scholarships program. She bought a home in Annisquam where she could have a garden and dogs and cats, moving from the family home on Friend Street. She wrote Lookout columns bright with humor and Gloucester flavor. She edited the women's news.

"Then she fell in love with Brazil or rather, Brazilians. She went there on vacation, she studied Portuguese, she managed to get a Cadillac ambulance shipped to a hospital in Recife, and she went back there for a stay of several months. She was welcome in many places, interviewed and entertained.

"She loved the gay spirit of Brazilians especially at carnival time, and wrote enthusiastically about her experiences.

"But she came home to Gloucester where she had roots.

"She was a good writer for this newspaper, capable of producing pleasing and pertinent prose very quickly when needed. She struggled against superficiality, and liked to devote enough time to research to enable her to do a worthwhile report, for example on the care of mentally retarded children.

"She became the newsroom's health and disease expert, able to report intelligently in these fields. It stands to reason that such assignments must have galled her at times, but she didn't rebel or crump out.

"The greatest story about her courage has just come to me. She was being chided rather severely, as newspaper writers are now and then by various persons, from readers to editors. She listened and smiled and said little or nothing. It wasn't until years later that I learned that she was having a heart attack while she maintained that steady smile."

—Paul B. Kenyon

PROVIDED BY BEQUEST

A bequest of $120,000—one of the largest in Lasell's history—has been left to the College from the estate of Walter R. Kattelle of Upper Montclair, N.J., in memory of his wife Nellie Feagles Kattelle, Lasell '97. The gift will be used to establish a scholarship fund in her name.

Mrs. Feagles died in 1963; her husband last September 22. A graduate of M.I.T., Class of 1900, he had long been a successful architect and engineer in the Northern New Jersey area.

Something of the Kattelles' attitude toward Lasell was expressed in a letter to the Alumnae Office from Mr. Kattelle soon after his wife's death:

"In front of me on the desk," he wrote, "is a picture of Nellie Feagles whom I met a few days after her graduation and who has been my wife for 55 years. She left me suddenly last July 12 after a very long illness.

"After graduation she and her mother stayed in President Bragdon's house, where I was a frequent caller. Then she and her mother went with one of Mr. Shepard's Lasell travel groups for a summer in Europe, and stayed over in Berlin where Nellie attended Frau Dr. Hempel's Language School. The next summer they joined Mr. Shepard's group again on a trip to the North Cape and Russia.

"We were married October 1, 1908 and lived in Auburndale for two years. Nellie was much interested in Lasell. It meant much to me as well."

In the present collegiate turmoil over: the definition of curriculum objectives; the demand for, let alone the meaning of, "relevancy;" the importance of intellectualism in education; and even the basic role of education itself in society; the melange of ideas and counter-ideas is sometimes bewildering to layman and professional alike.

Even the sources of unrest and reform are not always clear. Is it the students who no longer fit our traditional patterns of education, or the faculty who have accurately or inaccurately divined their changing needs? Has the standardization of educational milestones and objectives lagged so far behind the needs of society for the educated professional and semi-professional, that nothing is now relevant? Or does the discontent lie within an entirely different group of students for whom a separate and wholly different type of educational pattern should be evolved?

Trying to find answers to these questions was a 9-member task force reporting recently to HEW Secretary Elliot L. Richardson, which stated as their chief finding that universities and colleges must move their faculties and students off campus into the real world. Some of their specific recommendations included:

- * Community colleges shouldn't be saddled with the "left-over problems" of the nation's senior institutions but should develop their own styles and missions.

- * Teaching formats "other than the classroom lecture-reading format that now prevails" should be used, and this means going off campus to use as teachers experienced persons who don't have a string of degrees.
- * The academic "lockstep" should be broken, which means relaxing barriers to non-standard admissions and transfers, providing opportunity for part-time and older students, and encouraging "involuntary" students to leave.
- * "Educational internships in the outside world should be vastly expanded."

But are these solutions right for all types of students? While it may be unfashionable to look at the example afforded by yesteryear's or even yesterday's successes and failures to set guidelines for the future, perhaps before we "throw the baby out with the bath-water," we should take the widest possible look around us. A fresh view of this complex problem is offered by a case study of the recent failure of a new and innovative university, as it was reported in the New York Times this Spring.

Writing about the demise of the highly experimental State University College at Old Westbury, L.I. this year, the Times editor M. A. Farber said that the three-year-old "amalgam of libertarianism, action-oriented urban studies, and Socratic dialogue about man's great ideas" yielded, among other things, "experiences that were as wrenching and disallusioning as they were brief."

The university, which had no academic departments, no failing grades, no traditional examination, "was structured only to the extent that it provided the opportunity for independent field work and seminars." Students were to have "full partnership in the academic world, be allowed, in large measure, to set their own areas of study and research . . . on almost any subject that was neither illegal nor hazardous."

The result was that some students worked in mental hospitals or for welfare rights organizations or among delinquents in nearby East Harlem. Others studied filmmaking at a Paris cinematheque, lived in Israeli kibbutz and Arab villages, or went to Mexico to learn Spanish. Another "sizable number of students" preferred classes and chose not to leave the campus.

Some observers said the field work was profitable on the whole. Others reported that it "deteriorated considerably because of student laxity." According to former President Harris Wofford, "the main problem was the faculty's failure to respond to student wishes for more guidance." Senior officials of the N.Y. State University Systems blame the incessant feuding and indecision in settling issues of academic policy and administrative authority for the ultimate failure of the university.

Surprisingly, it will open again in September. This time, with a new set of guidelines, new leadership, and a new name, educators will have another try at finding progressive solutions to new problems. If State University should fail again in its bold attempt to make this experimental laboratory a stable enterprise, it will at least have provided a vivid arena from which others may gain some much-needed insights into the redefinition of basic premises, and the realistic evaluation of demands from those who have already expressed their dissatisfaction with traditional educational patterns.

Perhaps then, after specific new objectives have been defined, new systems and approaches may be devised for realizing them. Then too, with perhaps a deeper understanding of their needs, the faculty may be in a better position to provide students with leadership in their search for ways to attain those goals.

REUNION WEEKEND

Alumnae from California to Michigan, Georgia and Maine gathered on campus to share the occasion of their fifty-fifth to fifth reunions, Friday and Saturday, June 11 and 12.

For the first time reunioners came together for a series of entirely on-campus events which began with an informal "Ice Breaking" in the North Lounge of Woodland Hall on Friday evening, preceding a buffet dinner in Valentine Dining Room. Saturday morning a breakfast and mid-morning coffee were followed by an All Reunion Luncheon in the dining room, and later by a barbeque picnic dinner on the athletic field. Guided tours during the day on Saturday, with "Miss Mac" McClelland as courier, offered recent and not-as-recent graduates alike the opportunity to renew memories and get reacquainted with a changing campus profile. A special feature of Saturday's activities for the classes of 1916 and 1921 was a dinner with Dr. and Mrs. Greene at the President's House that evening.

Coming from California for the weekend of events were representatives of two major reuning classes: Pauline Wild Gordon '21, Pasadena; Doris Brown Bergin '21, Santa Barbara; and Lucille Sahakian Davies '46, Thousand Oaks. Also arriving for the fiftieth was Margaret Loomis Collingwood '21, Albuquerque, New Mexico. Moving further east, Etta Burns Peters '51 came from Ballwin, Missouri to join classmates celebrating their twentieth.

From the midwestern states were two members of the Class of 1921: Herma Schweitzer Comstock, Toledo, Ohio; and Jeannette Geist Stanley, Lansing, Michigan. And from the same area, representing the Class of 1961 were: Noel Upham Donohoe, Glenview, Illinois; Jane Parsons Dolbier, Westerville, Ohio; and Lynn Kiefer Holt, Cleveland. Adding to the list of long distance travelers were two alumnae from North Carolina: Priscilla Driggs Bevin '56, Chapel Hill; and Patricia McKinnon Williams '61 from Winston-Salem.

From the Class of 1926 were three Lasell mothers: Bernice Cunningham Smith, whose daughter Sandy Smith, North Wilbraham, Mass.; was also reuniting with the Class of 1956; Elinor Stevens Stockman, Millburn, N.J., mother of Marguerite Stockman Tierney '61; and Elizabeth Kimball Golden, Hinsdale, N.H., mother of Mary Elizabeth Golden Michaud '62. Another Lasell mother whose daughter, Barbara Cole French, Natick, Mass., was chairman of '61's reunion, sat at the head table: Mildred Bell Cole '31, Westwood, Mass., who is a member of the Alumnae Fund Committee. Her second daughter, Betty Cole Burnham, Duxbury, Mass., is Lasell '63.

With the twenty-fifth reuniting class were all three White Jacket winners of that year: Virginia Terhune Herson, Augusta, Maine; Dorothy Morris Bresnahan, North Scituate, Mass.; and Lee Pool Langley, Weston, Mass., who is Corresponding Secretary of Lasell Alumnae, Inc. Lynn Blodgett Hall, Lexington, Mass., a past president of the Alumnae Association and a member of the class of '46, also attended.

In all there were seventeen representatives of the Class of 1921 on hand, approximately thirty from 1946 sharing their twenty-fifth reunion, and over fifty members of the Class of 1961 who gathered at the All Reunion Luncheon on Saturday to bring the grand total of returning alumnae to one hundred and eighty.

After luncheon President Greene welcomed all reuniting classes and as Lasell Alumnae, Inc. President Sandy Sheldon Fitch '56 read the citations, Dr. Greene presented the Lasell Medallion to each of three new winners of the award who were honored at the luncheon meeting.

The Lasell Medallion

Given each year in recognition of alumnae, friends and members of the college community who have added distinction to the name of Lasell, the award was established in June 1968 when the first five medallions were given. In June of 1969 six recipients were honored at the second annual ceremony. This year three were awarded during Alumnae Council (see Leaves, Spring '72), and three additional Medallions were presented at the reunion luncheon on June 12, when three past recipients were also present. They were: Helen L. Beede '21, Muriel R. McClelland, and June Babcock.

Medallions, which are made possible through a gift from Chester H. Lasell, a grandson of Josiah Lasell, the co-principal of the college from 1852 to 1861 and a brother of its founder Edward Lasell, went to the three following alumnae, with these citations:

Sarah Fletchall '31

Sarah Fletchall, a graduate of Northampton's Clarke School for the Deaf, came to Lasell in September 1927—completed the High School program—was graduated in 1931. Due to the Depression and the scarcity of jobs in her chosen field of Art, Sarah turned her talents to weaving, which she taught at the People's Institute in Northampton for twelve years.

For her work in Arts and Crafts at summer camps, Sarah was singled out for honors by the State of New York and by the National Girl Scout Headquarters in Washington. She has served as a Director at Sea Pines Camp for the past seven summers; will spend the 1971 season in Maine as Arts and Crafts and Nature counsellor.

In more recent years, she has done scientific illustrating for professors at the University of Massachusetts and at Smith College. Her pen and ink drawings and water color illustrations have been used by Arthur Montgomery of Lafayette College. Mr. Montgomery is the author of a minerology textbook.

Sarah holds membership in the Daughters of the American Revolution and the Northampton Photography Club. She is secretary of the Photographic Society of America's Study Group #21; is much in demand to show an illustrated program entitled "Nature Throughout the Year", composed of her own color slides.

Lasell Alumnae Incorporated is pleased to present a Medallion to our gifted alumna SARAH FLETCHALL.

Adelaide Shaffer Campbell x-'36

Our next Medallion recipient is Adelaide Shaffer Campbell of the Class of 1936. Adelaide is the third generation president of Louis W. Shaffer, Incorporated—a realty firm founded by her grandfather in 1882 in Hackensack, New Jersey.

“First Woman in New Jersey” would be a fitting title for Adelaide: in 1959 she was elected president of the Central Bergen County Board of Realtors; in 1968, President of the New Jersey Association of Real Estate Boards. Again she is the first woman of The Garden State—and one of 10 in the nation—to attain M A I designation (Member Appraisal Institute) of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers. Adelaide has held numerous offices in the New Jersey Association of Real Estate Boards and maintains an unusually busy schedule as speaker at National and State conventions and conferences.

Within her community, she has actively participated in the Federation of Women’s Clubs, Little Theatre, Community Chest, Red Cross, Y.M.C.A., and the Chamber of Commerce.

It is a distinct privilege to award a Medallion to ADELAIDE SHAFFER CAMPBELL.

Marvine Weatherby '41

In June 1941, Lasell Junior College recognized Marvine Weatherby as an outstanding member of the Senior Class by awarding her a coveted White Jacket; today—on the occasion of her 30th Reunion—Lasell Alumnae Incorporated is proud to recognize Marvine Weatherby as an outstanding alumna by awarding her a Medallion.

Following graduation from Lasell, Marvine enrolled at the University of Texas in Austin; received her B.A. degree there in 1944. She then enlisted in the Waves, and at close of World War II was discharged with the rank of Pharmacist Mate 3/c. She continued to further her education at the University of Texas; in 1953 was graduated from its Medical School in Galveston. Tex served her internship and residency in Pathology in Galveston, where she was also a Teaching Fellow. She is now in private practice of Pathology in a Dallas clinical laboratory—a subsidiary of Smith, Kline & French. Her favorite hobby is foreign travel with particular interest in visiting hospitals throughout the world to study socialized medicine —“to find out what it’s all about”.

JUNE 5, 1971 – COMMENCEMENT DAY

1. First on the schedule for Commencement Day was the traditional Nurses' Pinning Ceremony in Winslow Hall where thirty-five graduating seniors received their pins, just two hours before receiving their Associate in Science degrees in commencement exercises. Now qualified to work as graduate nurses, they are also eligible to take the all-important R.N. state board examinations in August.

2. Named as winners of the Lasell Chair in the ceremony this year were, on the left, Susan Marie Delis, Simsbury, Conn., President of the Class of 1971; and, right, Kathryn Ann Johnston, Manchester, Conn., who also received top honors in Secretarial Studies and one of the four gold medals given for highest academic standing in the class.

3. Ready in the line-up for the processional at eleven o'clock, seniors watch for the signal to proceed from Miss Muriel McClelland, before following the faculty to the big tent.

4. Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Mrs. David Rosen, speaking to seniors before presenting them with their degrees. As they became alumnae, they were congratulated by President Greene.

Representative Robert F. Drinan, S.J. Massachusetts Third District

On November 7, 1972, some seventeen months from next Tuesday, a new army of 11,200,000 young Americans between the ages of 18 and 21, will be able, if they so determine, who will govern this country, and by what moral principles. Those people will govern our democracy. For the first time in all of American history, individuals who will be eighteen on or before November 7, 1972 will be able to vote in all elections.

If the young people of America want to demonstrate their rightful discontent with a government unresponsive to the demands of its citizens and a nation unreceptive to the needs of the world, young people can marshal, and I hope they will marshal, their collective political strength and achieve results in seventeen months from Tuesday, which will have to be placed in the category of the greatest political miracle in the history of America.

I have the hope that young people, like the graduates of today, will organize politically, that they will go and express their moral convictions in the ballot box. Indeed I hope that the young people of America today will not wait that seventeen months, but that they will show that they have a new moral force in this country. And if they begin to organize as they could right now, they will demonstrate to all public officials, elected and appointed, that the greatest moral force in the history of this country has arrived.

Today young people are demanding, and I am convinced that they are right, that the plight of the poor, the starvation right now of half of humanity, and the vast waste of the world's resources on the arms race, must be the urgent concern of the American government.

affluence over justice and security over equality. Young people are resentful because the society that they are now entering has allowed the rich and the powerful to use the law and to use existing institutions to safeguard the strength and the resources and the wealth, of the rich and the powerful.

I am more and more persuaded that young people in America with all their idealistic aspirations will not be crushed; they will not be extinguished; they will not be inhibited. The desire and the determination that they have for a better society, it seems to me, are qualities that are irreversible, and hopefully even escalating.

Some of the members of the two generations ahead of the graduating class today may say that perhaps young people exaggerate. But the fact of the matter is that young people from Berlin to Berkeley have made it overwhelmingly clear that they are determined to create a better world. Sometimes they may state their case rather poorly. Sometimes individuals who are young may get involved in techniques that are reprehensible. But the fact of the matter is that the young people of America are challenging some of the basic moral assumptions on which contemporary society is based.

The class of 1971 will go forth into a world that will be radically changed for better or for worse within the next ten years. And in confrontation with that certainty, what can I say to these four hundred young women as they go fortified by the excellent training at this distinguished school, as they move into another career?

Let me urge the following three counsels. By a careful self-analysis, I hope that these graduates understand the enormous importance and the resultant responsibility which is theirs by reason of the distinguished and unique training which they have received in the sciences and in the humanities at Lasell. To you my dear graduates has been given the knowledge and the skill for which one fourth of humanity in the third world has a passionate hunger.

With that knowledge, with all these skills, you have the enormous responsibility to exercise and utilize your talents, in all possible ways. Your responsibility is compounded by the fact that the role of the educated woman has changed more in the past 20 years than it has in the past 20 centuries. I hope that you will be distinguished women who are intellectuals, and that you will show that women, almost for the first time in the history of the human race, can and should be in the front line in governing this country.

Secondly, I would say and urge you to make your presence felt and your voice heard in the halls of government. I think it fair to say that the fundamental policies of this nation have not been very carefully formulated; they have not been fully participated in by the voters or by the citizens. I'm afraid that the basic policies of this government have been made up in a precipitated way, by reaction to crisis after crisis from the international community. I can think, my dear graduates, of no more profitable, and hopefully enjoyable, enterprise than organizing and registering every single person who will be eligible to vote this year or next year.

I would urge you also to let your presence be felt and your voice be heard in political campaigns. And if my generation, even if your parents have not been active in political campaigns, I think that this is the way to show the world that the system does work. And if the young people of America, the 11,200,000 do not really make their vote and their voice heard in the next seventeen months, they can hardly claim any credibility when they say that the system doesn't work.

If the younger generation wants to reverse all of the apathy of that generation between 35 and 55 that really didn't care very much about politics or politicians, then young people have to become involved in a most intense way in every dimension of the political process.

Third, I would urge you, my dear graduates, to continue to develop those skills which you have gathered at this admired, and outstanding, and indeed venerable, institution. I would also urge you to seek in every way possible to share those skills with young people in the developing nations either by trying to go to those countries, or by somehow assisting those students from all of those nations of the third world to study or work in America.

Let me speak briefly to those who administer or teach at this distinguished school. As a person who has a passionate interest in and devotion to private higher education, I beseech you to deepen your dedication and your devotion to your vocation as a counselor of young people. You have before you, in this institution, the very persons in America who can bring about a true rebirth of the political system. And you have, therefore, before you each year those individuals who can restore the course of this country to a pursuit of those moral and spiritual principles set forth in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution. I envy you, as a person who has left academic life, I envy you the exalted responsibility of carrying out that mandate, placed wisely in the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, affirming the duty of all of us to diffuse scientific knowledge, in every way.

At this distinguished school we can hope, and we can be assured, that as the years go on everyone will be more aware of the solemn mandate of our own constitution and hopefully we will be able to look forward to the day when the private sector and non-public institutions will also be able to share in governmental funding for carrying out that constitutional mandate of diffusing scientific knowledge.

My dear graduates as you begin a pilgrimage today you are fortified in that journey, seeking a more just and a more compassionate society, by everything that has been given to you in this institution. That pilgrimage will I hope be assisted by your own righteous anger at the injustices of a materialistic and heedless society which you see all around you.

You have, in my judgement, a better opportunity than any previous generation to become the moral architects of a better society. Why do I say that? I say that because now, as never before, due largely to the courage of young people speaking out in outrage at the barbarities and injustices tolerated in our society—because of those protests, society is prepared to listen to all of you when you will challenge the institutionalized injustices of contemporary existence.

I urge you therefore, my dear graduates, to be the conscience of this society. I exhort you to cherish those feelings of anger and indignation, of alienation and injustice, cherish them as noble sentiments. And I urge you to take as that unique and special role in that pilgrimage that begins today, the reform of the political institutions of America. You can modernize and reform these institutions not by wild demonstrations, not by tearing down these institutions, but by participating actively in them, as well-informed citizens, as young voters with this unique and unprecedented privilege of voting—seventeen months from Tuesday. Exploit fully the power of that ballot which now you have as young Americans. And I hope that you will continue to make a profound impact on our entire culture. By doing that, I know, and I am consoled and strengthened by the fact, that you will achieve much because you are profoundly committed to the proposition that the moral cement that holds all of us together is the guarantee of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness built into the basic institutions by which we live.

I think it more true of this class than any class before, what President Kennedy said one time in a famous aphorism. President Kennedy said that those who make peaceful revolution impossible, make violent revolution inevitable. In every generation of American existence we have sought and received a peaceful revolution, a rising tide of expectation, an elevation in the quality of human existence. And I feel confident, knowing well the quality and excellence of this institution, that the class of 1971 will create and bring about that peaceful revolution because all of us know that if that does not become possible for the millions in America to whom it is not now possible, that we will have what President Kennedy predicted, and which I know this class will work against with all their talents and might, that we will have what each of us seeks to prevent in his own way, the inevitability of a violent revolution.

Thank you very much.

"TIME PRESENT AND TIME PAST"*

Lasell Since the 50s as Remembered by Retiring Lecturer in English, Hazel W. Weden

When Hazel Wilcox Weden, Lecturer in English, retires from the faculty this June she will end a 22-year term of teaching service to Lasell. We asked her if she would be willing to share with us some of her observations on the changing scene of Lasell over this almost quarter-century in its history, and she graciously responded with the following article in the form of a letter to alumnae.

Before I become serious, perhaps you will permit me some lighter memories, which keep crowding before my eyes in shifting patterns like a child's kaleidoscope.

As I walked up Lasell hill on that September day in 1948 to meet my first Lasell students (one class in Freshman English), I was a little apprehensive, I'll admit. But that was when it began, for me. There I was, with an opportunity to talk about literature, which I loved, with young people whom I liked, with colleagues whom I respected. I was enthusiastic about my job, and I fast became almost as much of a campus fixture as if I had earned a Lasell diploma. I never have regretted that walk up the hill.

My first class was in old Woodland—some of you remember the huge, rambling building on Washington Street, with its miles of corridors, which research informed me had formerly been "Woodland Park Hotel," a very genteel vacation spot for Bostonians just before the turn of the century. I remember how excited I was to find it actually described by Hamlin Garland in his Son of the Middle Border, in the chapter which gave an account of his visit in 1887 to William Dean Howells, who was vacationing there. Garland described the portieres and those horsehair sofas in the parlors exactly as I found them in 1948.

And then there was Room 3 in Bragdon, where I taught American Literature, facing a bucolic painting of some cows in a French landscape. Somehow it was difficult to carry on a snappy discussion of the moral conflict in Moby Dick, for example, under the limpid gaze of those cows. I think it was in that room, too, that I couldn't find one of my students while checking attendance one morning, because over night she had turned into a blonde, a rather daring step for those days. ("We've come a long way, baby!")

Another shift of the kaleidoscope and I see that "back room in Plummer," where for about seven years students attended classes in the Reading Laboratory, which I was asked to establish in 1950. Often I find myself remembering warmly

Another rearrangement of the prisms brings me nostalgic memories of my adventures in running the Concert and Lecture Series, which we established about ten years ago, the excitement of entertaining such celebrities as Martin Agronsky, David Brinkley, Sander Vanocur, Carl Rowan, Boris Goldovsky, John Braine. I remember how, after a particularly harrasing series of details had to be worked out on one of those occasions, David Brinkley commented, looking down at me with that characteristic wry smile, "I think we could use you down in Washington!" Some of you recall the pleasure with which we welcomed back our own Jeannie Orsi '66 as one of the performers in the series, and the surprise when about thirty of her classmates showed up for an impromptu reunion in her honor.

**From the stanza in Burnt Norton, by T.S. Eliot which continues: "Are both perhaps present in time future,/ And time future contained in time past."*

These are some of my lighter memories. As to the classroom itself, there have been so many changes! Back in "those days" we were pretty rigid in our teaching of English. A sentence was a sentence, and no nonsense about it. Themes with sentence fragments were graded F. We taught rigid grammar, too, conscientiously—and I have to add a little ruefully, rather ineffectively. Despite the lessons on the blackboard on dangling participles and the proper use of the comma in compound sentences, and the drills and exercises, subsequent themes still bore their usual plethora of mistakes. And down fell the grades—and many tears.

Realizing that there was very little "carry-over" from these grammatical gymnastics, English department instituted the conference system in 1960, which happily, is still in effect. This procedure was an acknowledgment that mistakes in grammar and spelling were personal, individual. The teaching load of each instructor was reduced by one section, and at least three hours every week given over instead to student conferences. We found that students were better motivated to improve their writing when their own errors and weaknesses were discussed.

Within the last few years we have been challenged too by confrontation with the "now" generation. Students today are not responding to the traditional; they question why. They say frankly that they find the lecture and note-taking kind of class boring and "irrelevant." Instructors in the English department have been responding to this challenge by trying a few innovations—not necessarily throwing out all the traditional, but rather trying to devise more interesting methods of presentation.

I have always had three aims in my Freshman course, which I present as rather typical of the department; first, to teach students to communicate their ideas in a logical, straight-forward way so that their writing is effective and therefore more successful in all of their courses. My second aim has been to encourage them to read with some degree of perception and appreciation of what has been considered "good" writing. My third aim really evolves out of the other two: to make students think about issues, to examine their preconceived ideas, and to reject the phony. These goals have guided me, transcending method.

This last year has been experimental in Freshman English. Gone are the ten required themes a semester, on assigned subjects, with their dull writing and their low marks. Instead, we have asked the students to keep a journal (not a diary), and have encouraged their confidence in their natural ability to expand their ideas on topics of their choosing. Most of this writing has not been graded. The resulting improvement in their ability to "express themselves" has been gratifying. As for grammar, anyone who reads widely today knows that a revolution has been going on both in grammar and in the use of language. We must remember that usage has always produced the rules,

Here I must add that I can not presume to speak for the whole department. Because this program was experimental, the results are now being evaluated and will be assimilated into the newly organized Freshman course for next year. It will combine the best of our year of experimentation with more structure and unity.

Literature courses also have become less stereotyped. Let me illustrate from what I know best, my American Literature course. About three years ago I gave up the traditional disciplinary quizzes and formal exams, and instead encouraged a more sophisticated approach—individual long-range projects, "take-home" exams, and student-conducted discussions when reading was due.

The present generation of students has really been responsible for much of the general tuning-up in education, and while it may not be possible to agree with all of their ideas or methods of implementing them, their concern with the quality of life, their idealism, their rejection of what is hypocritical, are refreshing signs for the future. They need your support and your understanding.

Mrs. Greene addressing the Greater Boston Lasell Club Annual Luncheon, May 15, 1971.

Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth Greene were the guests of honor at The Greater Boston Lasell Club 2nd Annual Luncheon-Fashion Show on May 15, 1971. Fifty-two members and guests enjoyed a buffet at the Holiday Inn of Auburndale.

Guest speaker at the luncheon was Mrs. Greene. The "president's lady" talked about her first year as Lasell's "first lady." It was a year that was highlighted by many notable visitors to the college and a year that was made memorable for the Greenes by the opportunity to form close associations with members of the student body.

The luncheon was concluded with a drawing for door prizes and the presentation of a Paul Revere bowl to Barbara Cole French '61, retiring president of the Greater Boston Club.

ON A PERFECT RIVER DAY

Any lovely spring afternoon will do, and if you're lucky the faculty may turn out to join the fun—with the Greenes arriving to provide moral support from the motor launch. River Day 1971, with seven races punctuating an afternoon of impromptu riverside spectator activities for children, dogs, and even baseball and tennis players enjoying one of the first warm spring days on the playground, arrived with all the appropriate pagentry of pigtails and war paint suited to Lasell's "war canoes," and reviving the Spring in everyone.

Lasell's unique tradition of River Day which began in the Spring of 1907 was, if not the reason for the founding of the Lasell Athletic Association, certainly chief among its enthusiastically supported activities. According to the yearbook of 1910, Miss Francis, who was "Director of Gymnasium Work at the Seminary at that time . . . realized that many girls who could not paddle a canoe could play an extremely good game of tennis or of basketball; and that potential good players were many; hence the basketball teams and frequent tennis tournaments." But obviously canoe races came first—and last—since the climax of each year's annual program was the final race in June, for which all the winners were awarded Lasell sweaters.

Actually the first trace of activities on the river to be found in the Lasell archives goes back even further to the founding of the Boat Club in 1894. During the years since 1910 various members of the faculty-administrative branches of the college have undertaken the job of preparing the crews for the annual spring event. From Mr. Ordway, half-brother of Dr. Winslow who also was superintendent of buildings and grounds for the college until the late '40's—to Richard Packard, Chairman of the History Department who trained crews in the 50's, with the help of "Miss Mac" the last 10 years. During this time, River Day's fame has traveled as far as the readership of Yankee magazine which carried a story on the crews during the sixties.

In these recent years, enthusiasts have moved back to the campus after the races for a picnic where athletic council officers for the following year are announced, and faculty taken on students in a baseball game. This year the game culminated a full day of athletic activities for the faculty, who turned out with three crews on the Charles during the afternoon—the largest number in the history of River Day.

In the 1971 running of the River Day races, dormitories, departments, and day student groups were pitted against each other on the 3/10-mile course which was won by Hoag House. Although their time of three minutes, thirty-eight seconds, was not, their fastest of the day, it served to win against the closely matched runner-up teams that followed in their wake.

After the shouting had died, their captain Janet Lesley Hakanson, a freshman from Woburn, accepted the Mariott Cup for the team. Provided for the first time last year by the nearby Marriott Motor Hotel, the cup was presented at the picnic by Miss Elinor Hoag, a former member of the English department faculty, who is also a native of Woburn, and after whom Hoag House is named.
